HISTORY OF · INDIA

130

THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE CLOSE Ob.

LORD DALHOUSIE'S ADMINISTRATION.

PT

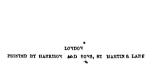

JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN.

. VOL. I.

LONDON:
LONGMANS, GREEN, READER & DYER.

1871

[The right of Translation is reserved.]

The compilation of this work was undertaken at the request of the University of Calcutta to assist the studies of those who were desirous of competing for its honours The author has been encouraged to publish an edition in this country on the kind assurance of friends that it may also be found useful by those who are in search of a brief and compen dious narrative of the progress of the British empire in India So far as historical truth can be discovered. he is prepared to youch for the accuracy of the facts detailed in it and he is not without a hope that his efforts to present an impartial and trustworthy opinion on the various transactions which have been the subject and the sport of party feeling may be found not altogether unsuccessful equivalent to 82 lbs., and a seer to 2 lbs.

Jinuar J 1st 1867

For the information of the English reader, it is requisite to intimate that a crore of rupres is a million sterling; a lac of rupees, 10,000£; a gold mohur, 32s.; a pagoda, 3s.; and a rupee, 2s.; also that a maun is

CONTENTS

OR

THE FIRST VOLUME

CHAPTER I

EARLY HISTORY TO THE GRUZVI INVASION

Boundaries and divisions of India

| Hindostan and the Decean           |          |       |   |     |     |
|------------------------------------|----------|-------|---|-----|-----|
| Chronology of the Hindoos          | _        |       | - | -   |     |
| early history of the Hindoos       |          |       |   |     |     |
| Fen divisions and ten languages    |          |       | - |     |     |
| The Vedas                          | -        |       |   |     |     |
| Munoo                              |          |       |   |     |     |
| The solar and the lunar race       |          |       |   |     |     |
| Pamu                               |          |       |   |     |     |
| The great war celebrated in the Mu | habbarni | Ł     |   | -   |     |
| The battle of kooroo kshetru       |          | •     |   |     |     |
| Influence of Ramu & expedition and | the gree | t war |   |     |     |
| The Takshuk invasion               |          |       | _ |     |     |
| Exped t on of Darins               |          |       | - |     | 1   |
| Bulle on of Boodh spread of Boodl  | tiens.   |       |   |     | 3   |
| Expedition of Alexander the Great  |          |       |   |     | 1   |
| His progress and return            |          |       |   |     | 1   |
| II s great projects and death      |          |       |   |     | - 5 |
| Nundu Chundra goopta               |          |       |   |     | -   |
| The Muonda kingdom                 | _        |       |   |     | - 1 |
| The Honikoola                      | •        |       |   |     | 1   |
| Expulsion of the Boodhists         |          |       |   |     | 1   |
| Cave temples of India              |          |       |   |     | 1   |
| Vikramadityu -                     |          |       |   |     | í   |
| The birth of Jesus Christ -        | -        |       |   |  | 5   |
| The Indese                         |          |       |   | _   | 3   |

CONTENTO

Date

| CONTENTS  |         |           |        |         |          |
|---|---------|-----------|--------|---------|----------|
|   | •       |           |        | P       | 200      |
| e range that are at the Descent   | _       |           | •••    |         | ઘ        |
| Early history of the DeccanThe Pandyas and the Cholas                 | -       |           | -      |         | 21       |
| herula Telingana, Orasa, and Maharas                                      | tra     |           |        |         | 22 *     |
| Kerula Telingana, Orissa, and Manara-                                     |         |           |        |         | 23*      |
| Rappoots of Chittore  | •••     |           |        | _       | 24       |
| Mahamed   |         |           | -      | _       | 25       |
| Early Mahomedan invas ons   | ttore   |           |        |         | 20       |
| War between the Mahomedans and Chi  | 1010    | -         |        |         | 26       |
| The Cunous Brahnfus in Bengal   |         | -         |        |         | ,        |
| . CHAPTER H   |         |           |        |         |          |
| FROM THE DYNASTY OF GRUZNI TO   | THE     | or To     | GHLUK  |         |          |
| 1009—1321   |         |           |        |         | L        |
| Movements in Khorasan and Cabul   | -       |        | -      |      | รมผลตลส  |
| 978 Subuktugeen   |         | *      | •••    |         | 25       |
| Invasion of Jeypal repelled   |      |           | •••    |         | 35       |
| 997 Death of SubuktugeenMahmood mounts the throne of Ghus             |         | -         |        |       | 29       |
| Mahmood mounts the throne of Chui   | mı      |        |        |         | 37       |
| 001 His first expedition to India   |         | ~~        |        | -       | 31       |
| 004 Second expedition   |         |           | • ••   |         | 31       |
| 1995 Third expedition1993 Fourth expedition Hindoo confeder           |         | Sector    | -      |         | 30 /     |
| 1903 Fourth expedition limited commence                                   | acy u   | leated    | *   |      | 31       |
| Capture of Nagarcote  |         |           |        | •-      | 31       |
| 1011 Sixth expedition, Thanesur1017 Ninth expedition—capture of Cinou |         |           |        | -       | 22       |
| 10% Twelfth expedition, plunder of Som                                    | nath    |           |        | -       | 33       |
| 1030 Death of Mahmood   | Laure I |           |        |         | 34       |
| His character   |         | -         | ••••   |         | 35       |
| 1030-1040 Musacod his conflict with the                                   | e Sel   | uka       |        |         | 36       |
| 1040-1118 Succession of seven monarchi                                    |         |           |        | -       | 87       |
| 1118 Byram his quarrel with Ghore   |         |           |        |         | 38       |
| 1152 The House of Ghuzm ret res to Ind                                    | a und   | er Khus   | ro     |         | 39       |
| 1186 The House of Ghuzni extinguishe                                      | d m 1   | the reign | of K   | husro   |          |
| Malik   |         |           |        |         | 39       |
| Antecedents of the House of Ghore   |         |           |        |         | 39       |
| 1152 Alla-ood-deen gives up the city of C                                 | lbuzni  | to plum   | der    |         | 43       |
| 1157 Gheras-ood deen mounts the throne                                    | and :   | usociáte  | ե հա հ | rother  |          |
| Shabab ood-deen (Mahomed of   | Ghore   | ) with    | him i  | n the   |          |
| government  |         | •         |        |         | 40       |
| 1191 State of the Hindoo princes Bhoje raja                               |         |           |        |         | 41       |
| Mahomed Ghore defeated by the H   | ndaar   |           | •      | -       | 42       |
| 1193 He conquers Delhi and Aymere   | Hados   | ,         | *   |       | 4344 |
| 1194 Conquest of Cunouj em gration of                                     | the l   | Pathores  | -      |         | 45       |
| 1 VA Conquest of Rehar and Rengal   |         |           |        |         | 48       |
| 1206 Death of Mahomed Ghory extent  | of ha   | territori | es he  | nitaria | . 45     |
|   |         |           |        |         |          |
| 1 '00 Koolub-ood deen established an                                      | inde    | pendent   | Maho   | medar   |          |
|   |         |           |        |         | 47       |
| 1711 Attomsh the slave of Loot in asce                                    | nds tl  | e throne  |        |         | 48       |
| 1219 Conquests of the Mognie under Je                                     | nglus   | ven "     |        | -       | . 48     |
|   |         |           |        |         |          |

|                       | cov | TENTS |
|-----------------------|-----|-------|
| Date                  |     |       |
| 1236 Death of Altumsh |     |       |

1401 Sultan Dilawur founds the independent kingdom of Malwa

1435 -1432 Ect. u of Mahmool Lium Chilgre in Malwa ....

1796 Mozuffer hah becomes undependent in Guzerat

| 1236 Death of Altumsh   | 50   |
|---|------|
| Sultana Rezia on the throne, her abilities weakness and death   | 50   |
| 1246 Nazir-ood deen sovereign, Bulbun vizier  | 50   |
| 1266 Bulbun succeeds to the throne , his virtuous reign -   | 51   |
| 1279 Expedition against Bengal  | 52   |
| 1288 Kei kobad s atrocities bring the dynasty to an end   | 53   |
|   | 53   |
|   |      |
|   | 54   |
| 1295 He assassinates his lather and mounts the throne 1297 Expedition to Guzerat  | 55   |
| 1207 Aspectation to Guzeras   | 56   |
| 1303 Capture of Chittore  | 56   |
| 1305-1306 Mogul invasions of India  | 57   |
| 1300 Renewed expedition to the Decan  | 91   |
| 1310 Farther invasion of the Decian, extinction of the Hindoo dynasty of Bellil   | 57   |
| 1311 Kafoor carries the Mogul arms to the extremity of the Deccan,  |      |
| and returns laden with booty  | 53   |
| 1316 Mobarik succeeds to the throne, is assassinated, and Ghazee  |      |
| Toghluk extinguishes the dynasty  | 59   |
|   |      |
| CHAPTER IIL   |      |
| FROM THE ACCESSION OF THE HOUSE OF TOGULUR TO THE ESTABLISH   | WEST |
| OF THE MOCUES, 1321-1526  |      |
| · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·   | 60   |
| 1821 Ghazee Toghluk   | 60   |
| 1323 Conquest of Telingana, and capture of Warungole  | 61   |
| 1325 Acce sion of Mahomed Toguluk, his wild character   | 61   |
| He attempts to conquer China and fails  | 62   |
| His tyranny and exactions   | 62   |
| 1338 He attempts to remove the capital to Dowlutabad 1340 I evolt of the provinces  | 63   |
|   |      |
|   |      |
|   | 64   |
| 1347 General rebellion in the Decema  | 64   |
| 1331 Death of Vahomed Toublak   | 64   |
| Feroze To-l luk his public works 1994 General anarchy and desolution of the monarchy 1399—1400 four in lependent kingdoms | 65   |
| 1394 (4 Berai anarchicanu disolution of the monarch)  | 65   |
| 1395-1400 Four in lependent kin_doms  | 65   |
| 1393 Invasion of Timur  He plunders Delhi and retires beyond the Indus  | 67   |
| 1414 khizir khan Syad founds a new dynasti  | 63   |
| 1414 khizir khan Syud founds a new dynasti 1450 The synd dynasty extinguished by Beloli Lodi                              | 68   |
| l ise of the Lodi family  | 69   |
| 1478 Jounpore reannexed to the throne of Delha -  | 70   |
| 14°8 Secundur Lodi his b gotry and intelerance  | 70   |
| 1517 Ibrahim Lodi succeeds to the throne, general revolt of the   |      | | provinces   | 71   |
|   |      |

νij

7î

72

|   |         |                 |         | 1.9  | 70   |
|---|---------|-----------------|---------|------|------|
| hate456 Alliance between Malwa and Gazers               | t for   | the cor         | desp.   | oξ   | -    |
| Chittore  | _       |                 |         |      | 73   |
| 482 Seraglio of Gheias-ood-deen of Malwa                    |         |                 |         |      | 73*  |
| 459-1511 Peign of the great Mahomed Sh                      | ah of t | Juzerat         |      |      | 74   |
| 1512 Mahmood the Second of Malwa                            |         | *            |         |   | 75   |
| Grandeur of Rana bunga of Chittore                          | -       | _               | *    |   | 70   |
| 1526 I xtinction of the Lingdom of Malwa                    | _       | •••             |         | * | 77   |
| 1340 Hussun Gungu first Bahmany king                        | -       |                 |         | * | ~7   |
| 1858 Coull et of Mahomed Bahminy with B                     | eciarn  | ngur            |         | * | 78   |
| 1397-1435 Reigns of Ferbre and Ahme I S                     | hah     | -0              |         |   | 79   |
| 1435 Alla cod deen a wars with the Hindoor                  |         |                 |         |      | 80   |
| 1463 Mahamad Shah Bahminy                                   |         |                 | *    |   | 81   |
| 1481 His great minis er Mahmood Gawan                       | execut  | ed by h         | s orde  | rs   | 23   |
| 1482 The Bahminy kingdom crumbles awa                       | v. and  | five sta        | tes for | med  |      |
| out of it   |         |                 |         |      | 84   |
| Riscoof the Portuguese power                                |         |                 |         |      | 84   |
| 1497 Vasco de Gama conducts the first ex                    | peditio | n to Ind        | 13      |      | 85   |
| 1499 Second voyage under Cabral                             |         |                 |         |      | Вđ   |
| 1502 Vasco de Gama s second voyage                          |         | *            |         |      | 87   |
| 1508 Almeydas navai actions                                 | *    |              | *    |      | 83   |
| 1507-1515 Albuquerque                                       |         | *            |         |      | 89   |
| • •   |         |                 |         |      |      |
| CHAPTER I   | rυ      |                 |         |      |      |
|   |         |                 |         |      |      |
| Mogue, Dynasty Baber to A                                   | KEBAR.  | 1526-           | ~1605.  |      |      |
| Early career of Baber                                       | *    | *            |         |      | 47   |
| 1519-1526 His five expeditions to India                     |         |                 |         |      | 92   |
| 1526 Baber enters Delhi                                     |         | *            |         |      | 93   |
| State of India on Baber's accession                         |         | -               |         |   | 93   |
| 15°7 Defeat of Rana Sunga                                   |      | *            |         |      | 24   |
| 1529 Baber attacks Chunderee                                |         | *            | •••     |   | 95   |
| 1530 His death and character                                |         | _               |         | * | 95   |
| Humayoon succeeds to the throne                             |         | *            | -       |      | 40   |
| 1533 He overruna Guzerat                                    |         | *            |         |      | 97   |
| 1537 Tragge death of Bahadoor Shah of (                     | lazerai |                 |         | -    |      |
| Origin of Shere Khan Afghan                                 | •       | •               | *    |   | 98   |
| 1539 He defeats Humayoon                                    |         |                 |         | •    | 98   |
| 1540 Humayoon flies across the Indus1542 Birth of Akbar |         |                 | -       |      | 99   |
| 1540-1545 Illustrious reign of Shere St                     |         |                 |         |      | 100  |
| 1545-1554 His two successors the cro                        | ish hi  | a dearn         | ·       |      | 10   |
| 1543 Humayoon retreats to Candshar as                       | wn losi | t to the :      | mmy     | -    | 10   |
|   | a tha t | stabrone of | Dalla   |      | 10   |
| 1556 H a death  |         |                 |         |      | 10   |
| Accession of Akhar  |         | _               | •       |      | 10   |
| Defeat and death of Herry -                                 |         |                 | •       | -    | 10   |
| 1500 Arrogance and fall of Bycam                            |         |                 |         |      | 10   |
| MCYOIL OF Albar a conceale                                  |         | -               | *    |      | 10   |
| about Derbism of Doorgrounding a Tree                       | loo pri | ncera           | -       |      | 10   |
|   |         |                 |         | -    | 10   |
| 1567 Complete subjugation of the disaf                      | fected, | r nerals        |         |      | . 10 |

CONTENTS

Date

|      | Matrimon al alliances with the royal Rajpoot familie | g                                       |      | 103 |
|------|--|---|------|-----|
| 1568 | Capture of Chittore                                  |   | -    | 108 |
|      | S ugular mode in which it is commemorated            |   | -    | 109 |
| 1572 | Conquest of Guzerat                                  | •                                       |      | 109 |
| 1550 | Orissa conquered by the Affahans of Bengal           |   |      | 110 |
| 15"6 | Conquest of Bengal by Akbar                          | _                                       |      | 111 |
| 15-7 | Revolt of the Mogul Officers in Bengal               |   | •    | 112 |
|      | Destruct on of the city of Gour                      | ••                                      |      | 113 |
|      | Conquest of Cashmere                                 |   |      | 113 |
|      | Attempt to curb the Khyberees                        | -                                       |      | 114 |
|      | -1594 Conquest of Sinde and Guzerat                  | -                                       |      | 114 |
| 100- | History of the Deccan in the 16th century, the five  | 10200                                   |      | 112 |
|      | of Beder, Berar Goleonda, Beejapore and hmed         | Biagu                                   | ошв  | 115 |
|      | Pise and growing importance of the Mahrattas         | magar                                   |      | 115 |
|      | Hindoo kingdom of Beejuynugur extinguished at the    | - hatt?                                 |      | 113 |
| 1000 | Tellicotta   | e parti                                 | e or | *10 |
|      | Portuguese during the 16th century                   |   |      | 116 |
|      | The great Beejapore gun                              |   |      | 117 |
|      | Combined attack on Gos                               |   |      | 117 |
| 1604 | Complete pacification and settlement of Hindostan b  | 111                                     |      | 118 |
| 1505 | Akbar s views on the Decean                          | y AED                                   | sr   | 119 |
| 1000 | He enters the state of Ahmednugur, the city de       |   |      | 119 |
|      | Chand S Itana  | enaea                                   | оў   | 120 |
| 1596 | She cedes Berar and makes peace                      | _                                       |      | 121 |
|      | Doubtful bittle of Soneput                           | -                                       |      | 121 |
|      | tkbar goes in person to the Deccan                   |   | -    | 121 |
| 1600 | Capture of Ahmedaugur                                |   |      | 121 |
|      | Candesh absorbed                                     |   |      | 1°1 |
| 1605 | Akbar 8 death and character                          |   |      | 122 |
|      | His rel g ous views and toleration, his revenue re   | forms :                                 | bas  |     |
|      | m I tary system and his Court                        |   |      | 104 |
|      | Division of the empire into soubahs                  |   |      | 124 |
|      | •  |   |      |     |
|      | CHAPTER V  |   |      |     |
|      | Jehangeye and Shah Jehan 1605—1638                   | }                                       |      |     |
| 1605 | Jehangeer ascends the throne                         |                                       | -    | 125 |
| 1606 | Rebell on of Libusto                                 |                                      | _    | 126 |
| 1611 | Marriage of Jehangeer with Noor Jehan                |   |      | 127 |
|      | Talents of Malik Amber he defeats Jehangeer          |   | ~    | 123 |
| 1614 | Subjugation of Oodypoore                             |   |      | 199 |
| 1615 | Embassy of Sir Thomas Roe to Delhi                   |   |      | 19  |
| 161" | Second expedition against Malik Amber                | -                                       |      | 130 |
| 1631 | Death of Khusro                                      |   |      | 131 |
|      | Lupress alienated from Shah Jehad                    |   |      | 131 |
| 1623 | Mohabet sent against him G                           | -                                       |      | 131 |
| 1600 | Mohabet serzes be emperor                            | ~                                       |      | 133 |
| 10%0 | Empress fights him and is defeated                   | ======================================= | -    | 133 |
|      | She is reconciled to him , release of Jehangeer      | _                                       | _    | 134 |
| 1627 | His death and character                              | _                                       |      | 134 |

CONTENTS

The end

| Date .  |                |             |            | F'a  |     |
|---|----------------|-------------|------------|------|-----|
| Accession of SI ah Schan  | _              |             |            |      | 34  |
| Ilia autenvament agranditura  | 2000           |             |            |      | 35  |
| Condition of the kingdoms of Be                                       | ciarore.       | Ahmed       | nugar, 1   | ກປັ່ |     |
| Golconda  | 9-1            |             |            |      | 35  |
| 1609-163" Revolt of Jehan Lodi , war                                  | kindled        | in the I    | occan.     |      | 36  |
| 1637 The kingdom of Ahmedaugur exti                                   | enished        |             |            |      | 37  |
| The emperor a accommodation wit                                       | Beerap         | ore         |            |      | 37  |
| Golconda submits to pay tribute                                       |                |             |            |      | 37  |
| Portnenese nower in Bengal  |                |             |            |      | 38  |
| 1632 Capture of Hooghly and extinction                                | of the l       | ortugu      | ese power  |      | 138 |
| 1637 Ali Merdan betrays Candahar to th                                | e empe         | ror         | -          |      | เชา |
| His caral   |                |             |            |      | 137 |
| 1644-164, Mi stary operations beyond                                  | the Ind        | us '        |            |      | 133 |
| Services of the Paiponts in the Hi                                    | ndeo no        | 80.         |            |      | 140 |
| 1648 Persians retake Candahar, three                                  | прапессы       | sful att    | empts to   | re   |     |
| cover it  |                |             |            |      | 140 |
| 1655 Aurungzebe viceroy of the Decci                                  | an, rene       | ws the      | war with   | lis  |     |
| princes   |                |             |            |      | 141 |
| Carper and talents of Meer Joomi                                      | 3              |             |            |      | 142 |
| 1656 Aurungzebe attacks Golconda, ply                                 | inders ar      | ıd burnı    | s Hyderab  | od,  |     |
| exacts a large tributo  |                |             |            |      | 143 |
| 1657 Unprovoked attack on Beejapor                                    | e, he 14       | obliged     | t suddenl  | r *o |     |
| proceed to Delhi  |                |             |            |      | 143 |
| The four sons of Shah Jehan   |                |             |            | ~    | 144 |
| Aurungzebe moves with Morad t   | ownigs T       | Jelhi.      | -          |      | 144 |
| Soojah takes the field and is defi                                    | eated by       | Dara        |            |      | 145 |
| 1658 Dara defeated by Aurungzebe                                      |                |             |            |      | 145 |
| Aurangzebe deposes Shah JehnDelbi                                 | n snq s        | scenus      | the inton  | e ot | 145 |
| Character of Shah Jehan   |                |             |            |      | 145 |
| His peaceck throne  |                | -           | -          |      | 145 |
| THE PERCOCK MITORS  |                |             |         |      | 140 |
|   |                |             |            |      |     |
| CHAPT   | ER VI          |             |            |      |     |
| AURUNGZEBE  | 1658-1         | 707.        |            |      |     |
|   |                |             | •          |      | 147 |
| 1658 Annungzebe gets rid of his three                                 | e protect      | S           |            | -    | 149 |
| 1662 His dangerous illness intrigueMeer Joomla's disastrous exped | s at the       | Cours       |            |      | 149 |
| Rise and progress of the Mahra  | Ittor vo       | Warme       |            |      | 150 |
| The Mahrattas trained to war  | tus. derme | the co      | ntesta bei | ween |     |
| Beejapore and Ahmednugur  | , ditting      | , 410 00    |            | 00   | 151 |
| 1594 Birth of Shabies   |                |             |            |      | 151 |
| 1620 He succeeds to the jaygeer of l                                  | Роопа          |             |            |      | 152 |
| 1004 lie endeavours to create a kunt                                  | of Abr         | ednugu.     |            |      | 152 |
| 1627 Birth of Sevance, his early had                                  | bats.          |             |            |      | 152 |
| 1545 Beg ns his career by canturing                                   | Torns          |             |            |      | 153 |
| 1049 His constant average one his                                     | father 86      |             |            |      | 153 |
| 1657 His correspondence with Auro                                     | ngzebe         |             | C.         |      | 154 |
| He plunders the Mogul territo1659 Aurungzehe cedes the Concan     | rics           |             |            |      | 155 |
| Ling of Begapore sends Afzu   | to pipe        | a sub las   | a brees    | •    | 155 |
| occapore sends Aizu   | I KEUN I       | O BITD [214 | · tent     |      | 155 |

COSTESTS

Afzul Khan treacherously murdered

Jehander Shah a brief reign

1662 The extent of Sevajee a possessions
Shaista Khan sent by Aurungzebe against Sevajee

Date

XI

Page

156 157

157

| • |       | Shaista Khan sent by Aurungzebe against Sevajee  | -       |        | 157 |
|---|-------|--|---------|--------|-----|
|   | 1664  | Sevajee plunders Surat   | -       | -      | 158 |
|   |       | Great commercial wealth of that port   |         |        | 758 |
|   |       | Death and possessions of Shahjee   |         |        | 159 |
|   |       | Maritime exploits of Sevajee   |         |        | 159 |
|   | 1665  | He submits to Aurungzebe   |         |        | 160 |
|   |       | Origin of the chout  | -       |        | 160 |
|   | 1666  | Sevajee goes to Delhi, treated with hauteur  | •       |        | 161 |
|   | 2000  | His civil and military institutions  |         |        | 162 |
|   | 1666  | -1670 Prosperous state of the Mogul empire   | _       |        | 162 |
|   | 1000  | Aurungzebe breaks with Sevajee who proceeds to le  | - d     |        | 163 |
|   | 1671  | Jinjeerah made over to the Mognis  | 13 010  |        | 163 |
|   | 1673  | Aurungzebe baffled in the Khyber   |         |        | 164 |
|   | 1070  | Sevajee assumes royalty with great pomp  |         |        | 167 |
|   | 1676  | His expedition to the Carnatic   | •       |        | 167 |
|   | 1070  | Insurrection of the Sutnaramees  |         |        | 164 |
|   | 1677  | Insurrection of the Sutharamees  |         | •      | 165 |
|   | 1077  | Aurungzebe persecutes the Hindoos imposes the je   | ZZLA    |        | 160 |
|   | 1670  | Revolt of the Rajpoots in consequence  |         |        | 169 |
|   | 1000  | Aurungzebe attacks Beejapore   |         |        | 169 |
|   | 1080  | Death and character of Sevajeo   |         |        | 170 |
|   | 3.000 | He is succeeded by Sambajee  |         | . 3. 3 | 170 |
|   | 1683  | Anrungzebe a grand expedition to the Deccan, hi  | s spier | iaia   | 172 |
|   | 740   | camp   |         |      | 172 |
|   | 1034  | He invades the Concan and 13 repulsed  |         |        | 173 |
|   | 1000  | Invasion of Beejapore, and plunder of Hyderabad  |         |        | 174 |
|   | 1007  | Conquest and extinction of the kingdom of Beejapor   | e       |        | 174 |
|   | 1001  | Conquest and extinction of Golconda  |         |      | 175 |
|   | 1000  | Confusion in the Deccan  |       | -      | 176 |
|   | 1023  | Sambajee made prisoner and put to deathSahoo becomes king, Ram raja regent retires to Gu             |         |        | 177 |
|   | 1000  | Extensive Mahratta depredations  | ajec    | ••     | 177 |
|   | 1032  | Comparison of the Mahratia and the Mogul armies  |         |        | 178 |
|   | 160/  | -1693 Siege of Ginjee  |         | •      | 1-3 |
|   | 1605  | Ram raja returns and makes Satara his capital  | -       |        | 179 |
|   | 1700  | New military plans of Aurungzebe   | _       | _      | 179 |
|   | 1700  | -170" His increasing embarrassments  |         |        | 180 |
|   | 170   | He makes overtures to the Mahrattas  | =       |        | 181 |
|   |       | He returns to Ahmednugur pursued by them   |         | •      | 181 |
|   | 1707  | Death of Aurungzebe, remarks on his reign  | _       |        | 181 |
| ۰ |       |  |         |        |     |
|   |       | CHAPTER VII  |         |        |     |
|   |       | ON THE DEATH OF AURUNGZESS TO THE INVASION OF  | Name    |        |     |
|   | FR    | THE DEATH OF AURUNGZERS TO 132 INVESTOR OF   | MADE    | a ou.  |     |
|   | 170   | Bahadoor Shah ascends the throne   |         |      | 182 |
|   | 170   | Dominions among the Mahrattas  |         |        | 143 |
|   |       | Daood Aban grants the chout to the Manrattas   | •       |        | 394 |
|   |       | Origin and progress of the Sikhs   |         |        | 294 |
|   | 171   | Origin and progress of the Sikhs 2 Behadoor Shah marches against them, his death Laborate Shah base from | -       | -      | 185 |
|   |       |  |         |        | 185 |

| 1713 Ferolahrer escendathe throno of Delhi   180   181   1 | Date                                       |         |         |          | 7           | 222   |
|--|--|---------|---------|----------|-------------|-------|
| Origin and progress of Nixmood mook   107  | 1717 Farel share escandathe throng of Dolh | 1       | _       |          | -           |       |
| 17-14 brilyee har runath becomes Neal was   18-15  | Omein and progress of Nizam-onl mod        | ik .    |         | ***      | ****        |       |
| Hussein Al'  recry of the Dectan   197   | and the same that mantly becomes Peel wa   |         |         |          |             | 187 • |
| Describ of Daood khrm   171   Hose or grit is the of out by a convention to the Mal ration   164     171   Hose or grit is the of out by a convention to the Mal ration   164     1718   Forcebore pri to dealer   172     1718   Forcebore pri to dealer   172     1719   Accession of Mahomed Shah   179     1720   Revolt of Frame-off nook   170     1720   Revolt of Frame-off nook   170     1721   1720  | I 14 Dillige visi vigatiti pecomes rest na |         |         |          |             | 187   |
| 171   Hases   print is the fast by a convention to the Mai ration   169  | These is the state of the recease          | ••      | *    |          |             | 197   |
| Lunark on this evist   198   | Death of Daood Kath                        |         | 15- 35  | itas     |             |       |
| 1718   Cresherr y 11 of other   1918   Arcesherr y 11 of other   1919   Arcesherr y 11 of other   1919   Arcesherr y 11 of other   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1910   1911   1910   19 | 1.1. Haze a Bant is the court of a courter | tion to | CER SC  | ri tatum |             | 158   |
| 1718   Crossinger of it to default   189   1720   Accession of Mahomed Subt   100  |  |         |         |          | ••          |       |
| 190   Received of Name of 190   19 | 1718 Ferokshere p it to death              |         |         |          | •           |       |
| 100  | 1"19 Accession of Mahomed han              |         | ****    | •        |             |       |
| 113 cm of a season lates of ejects   190   |  |         | -       |          | •           |       |
| 191  |  | ••      | -       |          | -           |       |
| 1720   | Mahomed Shah al olishes tl e jezzla        |         | ***     |          | ***         |       |
| 128  | 1"21 Urigin of the royal family of Ou to   |         |         | ~        | Jan. |       |
| 1720   Death of Malajee Visiterunath   | 1723 Arzam ool moolk independent vi er     | oy of 1 | Le Dec  | ממי      | ***         |       |
| 197  | 1720 Death of Balajee Vishwunath           | -       |         |          | ••          |       |
| 120   Rigo Abia as the clout of Gazerat  | Bajeg Rao Peshwa                           |         |         | ****     | **          |       |
| 1720   B yee Bao obta na the chout of Guerat   173   173   175   | Affairs of Guzerat                         |         |         |          |             |       |
| 130 The two Mahratin regal families  | 1"29 B ice Rao obta as the chout of Gaze   | rat     |         | ***      | *           |       |
| 1750 Origin of the Gui kwar Family Ora, no the family of Shedia Origin of the family of Shedia 1750 Charten on but vent the Avana and Bayes Rao 1750 Depte Rao exorbitant demands he marches to the gates of 166   | 1730 The two Mahratta royal families       |         |         | ****     | ***         |       |
| Orn, nof the family of Sindia  | 1730 Origin of the Gui kwar Pamily         |         | -       | ***      | ,,,,        |       |
| Ora, no of the fam ly of Holkar 115 1731 Convent on bet veen the bram and Bayee Rao 115 1739 Mairra coded to Bayee Rao 1193 Bayee Rao s corbitant demands he marches to the gates of Belhi 105   | Ori_ n of the family of Sindia             |         |         |          |             |       |
| 1731 Convent on betveen the Anam and Bayee Rao 113 1735 Maira ceded to Bayee Rao 100 Bayee Rao se corbitant demands he marches to the gates of 158h 106  | On in of the fam ly of Holkar              |         |         |          |             |       |
| 1°35 Maiva ceded to Bajec Rao Bajec Rao s exorbitant demands he marches to the gates of Delhi 106  | 1731 Convent on bet reen the Augum and     | Basen   | Pac     | -        |             | 105   |
| Bajec Raos exorbitant demands he marches to the gates ofDelhi 196  |  |         |         |          |             | 196   |
| Delhi 196  | Basec Rao s exorbitant demands 1           | e mar   | ches to | the gai  | tes of      |       |
| 1727 Who Nisom defeated by Roses Pagest Phones   | Delhi                                      |         |         |          |             | 196   |
|  | 1°37 The Nizam defeated by Bajes Pao       | at Bho  | nal     |          |             | 19~   |
| Nad r Shah s antecedents and career 118  |  |         |         |          |             | 118   |

CONTINUE

Page

100

203

200

201

nnn

203

204

204

20a

205

206

208

207

207

208

908

208

200

903

200

ri1

He plunders Delhi and the provinces State of India after his inves on

CHAPTER VIL BIRE AND PROGRESS OF THE EXCLISE 1600-1755

He invades Afighanistan and India

1739 He orders the massacre at Delhi

The Engl sh in India before 1600 1599 Format on of the last India Company

The r first adventures Power of the Portuguese at this period 1612 Firmans granted by the Emperor

1615 Embassy of S r Thomas Roe 1620 First settlement n Beneal 1636 Priv leges ob a ned by Mr Boughton 1639 F ret es ablishment of the factory at Madras

1058 Cromwell or nts a new charter to the Company 1661 Charter granted by Charles the Second

1669 Arqu s tion of Bombay ĸ. 1863 Introduction of Tea into bogland

1661 French East In 1 a Company establ shed 1667 The Dutch beg a to trade with Bengal ... 1667 The Danes est. blish a fa. tory in B ngat

CONTENTS

Date.

| Date.   |     |
|---|-----|
|   | 210 |
|   | 210 |
| 16°5 The Company go to war with the Great Mogul                   | 211 |
| 1683 Bengal abandoned by the Company                              | 212 |
| 1690 Reconciliation with the Emperor                              | 213 |
| 1690 August 24th Charnock returns foundation of Calcutta          | 214 |
| 1690 Ambition of the Court of Directors quenched for 50 years     | 215 |
| 1605 Fortification of Calcutta                                    | 215 |
|   | 216 |
|   | 218 |
| 1700 Embassy of Sit W Aorris to the Emperor                       | 218 |
| 1702 Union of the two Companies                                   | 219 |
| Con tant contests between the Soobadar of Bengal and the          |     |
| Company 8 agents from 1700 to 1756                                | 219 |
| Moorshed Loolee Khan viceroy of the three soubahs                 | 271 |
| 1715 Embassy from Calcutta to Delhi                               | 221 |
| Mr Hamilton disinterestedly obtains great privileges for the      |     | | Company   | 203 |
| 1715 Financial system of Moorshed Koolee Khan                     | 223 |
|   | 223 |
| Succeeded by Soojah-ood-deen                                      | 223 |
| The Ostend East India Company                                     | 224 |
| 1739 Death of Sociah cod-deen                                     | 224 |
| 1740 Ali verdy khan seizes the government                         | 224 |
| 1739 Di putes between Bajee Rao Peshwa and Rughoojee Bhonslay     | 225 |
| Fughoorees expedition to the Carnatic                             | 295 |
| 1740 Death of Bajee Rao   | 276 |
| 1740 Balance Barce Rao Peshwa                                     | 226 |
| 1741 Invasion of Bengal by the Berar Mahrattas                    | 227 |
| 174° The Vahratta D tch of Calcutta                               | 227 |
|   | 2^3 |
| 1745 Rebellion of Mustapha, the general of Ali verdy              | 228 |
| 1751 Alı verdy purchases peace by ceding Orissa to the Mahrattas, |     |
| and agreeing to pay chout   | 279 |
| 1710 Dacod Khan appoints Sadutoola governor of the Carnatic       | 229 |

1732 On his death Dost Ali succeeds to the post 1"36 Dost Ali fefeated and kille | by the Mahrattas 1741 Chanda Sahib sent prisoner to Satara

1740 The Nizam moves into the Carnatic appoints Anwar-ood-de u governor of the province, who founds the family of the Nahob of Arcot

Labourdennus Previo searcer

1746 Arrives of the ... st with a large armament Dupleix s early career Labourdonna s captures Mairas Fate of Labourdennais on his return to France ...

1744 War between the English and the French

CHAPTER IX

EFFORTS OF THE FRENCH TO ESTABLISH AN EMPIRE IN INDIA. 1746-1761

231

231

233 020

234

230 230

229

XIII Page

CONTENTS.

| Date | *  |         |        | Page |
|------|--|---------|--------|------|
| 1743 | Death of Mahomed Shah, accession of his won Al                   | hmen S  | de ded | 0-   |
|      | the throne of Delha  |         |        | 265  |
|      | The Nabob of Oude pushed by the Robillas, call                   | s in th | e Mah  |      |
| •    | rattas   |         |        | 265  |
| 1751 | The Abdalee a second proption                                    |      |        | 266  |
|      | Nabob of Oude becomes virtually independent                      |         | •      | 266  |
|      | Ghazee ood-deen deposes and blinds the enheror                   | -       | -      |      |
|      | The Abdalees third invasion, he sacks Delhi                      |         | -      |      |
|      | The pirate Conside Augria on the Malabar coast                   |         |        |      |
|      | Cine captures his fort of Gheriah                                | -       |        |      |
|      | Death of All verdy   | -       |        | 269  |
|      | Seraja Dowlah succeeds him as Nabob                              |         |        | 209  |
|      | Disputes between him and the governor of Calcu                   | tta     | • •    | 270  |
|      | Condition of Fort William  |         |        | 271  |
|      | Siege and capture of Calcutts                                    |         | •      | 272  |
|      | The trakedy of the Black Hole                                    |         | _      | 273  |
|      | Expedition from Madras to Calcutta                               |         |        | 274  |
| 1757 | Clive recaptures Calcutta and takes Hooghly                      | ***     |        |      |
|      | Serus Dowlah marches to Calcutta and is defeate                  | d       |        | 2-6  |
|      | Clive takes Chandernagore  |         |        |      |
|      | Confederacy against Seraja Dowlah                                |         | *   | 2-7  |
|      | Clive joins the Confederacy                                      | -       | -      | 278  |
|      | He circumvents Omichunds   |         |        | 279  |
|      | Battle of Plassy   |         |        | 279  |
|      | Seraja Dowlah flies to Bajmahal                                  |         |        | 280  |
|      | Meer Jaffier made Nabob by Chre                                  |         |        | 280  |
|      | His large donations to the English                               |         |        | 281  |
|      | Fate of Seraja Dowlah  |         |        |      |
| 1758 | Clive quells three insurrections                                 | _       |        |      |
|      | Colonel Forde sent to the Coast                                  |         |        | 283  |
| 1759 | Alı Gohur inva les Behar and submits to Clive                    |         |        | 284  |
|      | Dutch armament in Bengal defeated                                | -       |        | 235  |
| 1760 | Clive returns to England   |         |        | 286  |
| 1753 | Abmed Shah Ablalee returns to Persia                             |         |        | 236  |
| 1757 | His son Timur expelled from the Punjab, the Ma                   | brattas | Plant  |      |
|      | their standard on the Indus                                      |         | ٠.     | 236  |
|      | Sudasech Lao Bhao Mahratta generalisamo                          |         | *   | 286  |
|      | Peshwa wrests large territories from Salabut Jung                | *    |        | 237  |
| 1759 | Power of the Mahratias at its summit                             |         |        | 287  |
|      | Fourth invasion of the Abdales                                   |         |        | 287  |
|      | Murder of the Emperor Alumgar                                    | ٠.      |        | 288  |
|      | Vast Mahratta army advances against the AbSudaseeb I so Bhao | naree   | unaer  | 004  |
|      | Sudaseeb rejects the advice of Scoruj Mull the                   | Tanta   |        | 259  |
|      | draw from him  | *auis   | wirp   | 290  |
| 1761 | January 7, Decisive battle of Pan Put, death of                  | f SnA   | seel.  | +30  |
|      | total defeat of the Mahrattas                                    | , Juga  | eccs,  | 291  |
|      | Poshwa dies of a broken heart                                    |         |        | .61  |
|      |  | _       |        |      |

CHAPTER XI

| BENGAL, 1761-1772  |      |
|--|------|
|  | 'age |
|  | 292  |
| Mr Vansitiant Governor of Bengal                                     | 293  |
| Three members of Council summarily dismissed by the Court            |      |
| Three members of Council subtimizing distinged by the count          | 293  |
| of Directors   | 2)4  |
| 1760 Shahzada invades Behar and is defeated by Colonel Calliand      | 295  |
| Captain knox defeats the Nabob of Purneah                            | 235  |
| Death of Meerun  | 233  |
| 1761 Meer Jaffier deposed, and Meer Cassim made Nabob of Moor        |      |
| thedahad   | 296  |
| Meer Cassims vigorous administration, he organizes an                |      |
| efficient army   | 297  |
| The Emperors force in Behar dispersed by Colonel Carnac              | 293  |
| 1762 Meer Cussim despoils Ramnarayun Governor of Patna               | 299  |
| The transit duties disorders arising from them                       | 800  |
| Mr Vansittart a convention regarding them with Meer Cassim           | 300  |
| 1763 It is rejected by the Council in Cilcutta, Meer Cassim          |      |
| abolishes all duties   | 301  |
| Mr Ell a seizes the city of Patna, is overpowered and made           |      |
| prisoner   | 302  |
| Ti e Council in Calcutta make war on Meer Cassum                     | 302  |
| Meer Jaffier made Naboba second time                                 | 302  |
| Meer Cassum a troops defeated at Cutwa and at Chereah                | 802  |
| He ca ses his European prisoners to be massacred                     | 203  |
| Meer Cassims troops defeated at Oodwanulia, he flies from            |      |
| Behar  | 803  |
| 1764 The Nabob Vizier invades Behar                                  | 304  |
| First Sepoy mutiny quelled by Major Munro                            | 304  |
| The Nabob Vixter defeated at Buxar                                   | 805  |
| Pecuniary arrangement with Meer Jaffier                              | 306  |
| 1765 Death of Meer Jaffier   | 807  |
| He is succeeded by his son Nujum ooli dowlah                         | 307  |
| Lord Clive a treatment by the Court of Directors in England          |      |
| they are constra ned to appoint him Governor                         | 808  |
| Condition of Bengal  | 309  |
| Chive a arrangements with the Emperor, the Nabob of Moor-            |      |
| shedabad and the Vizier  | 310  |
| He restores Oude to the Viz er                                       | 310  |
| He obtains the Dewanny of the three provinces for the Com            |      |
| pany 12th of August C  | 311  |
| 1766 Mutmy of the European officers quelled by Chive                 | 312  |
| He establishes the Society for Inland trade                          | 314  |
| 1"67 He returns to England is subject to the most unworthy treatment |      |
|  |      |

1774 He pair a period to his existence 1767-1772 Wretched condition of Bengal

315

318 318 318

819

319

319

320

321

323

33.3

224

334

335

205

236

978

CHAPTER XIL

PROGRESS OF EVENTS AT MADRAS AND BOMDAY, 1761-1772.

|               | LECORES     |         |          |           | *  | Domont, | -101-1112   |             |
|---------------|-------------|---------|----------|-----------|-------|---------|-------------|-------------|
| Date.1761 | State of af | fairs s | t Madras | and in th | e Car | matic   | nt 4" 11 to | Page317 |

| 76L | State of at | fairs | at Madras  | and | in the C | arnatic    |    |         |
|-----|-------------|-------|------------|-----|----------|------------|----|---------|
| 763 | Mahomed     | Δlı   | instrgates | the | Madras   | Government | ŧ. | nttack  |
|     | Taniore     |       |            |     |          |            |    | a coaca |
|     | The Dogg    |       | Davis and  |     |          |            |    |         |

| 763 | Mahomed   | Αlı | instrgates  | the   | Madras   | Government | to | attac |
|-----|-----------|-----|-------------|-------|----------|------------|----|-------|
|     | Tanjore   |     |             |       |          |            |    |       |
|     | The Peace | of  | aris, and i | ts ar | iomalics |            |    |       |

| Tanjo:  |       |          |                   | ***     |     |          |          |
|---------|-------|----------|-------------------|---------|-----|----------|----------|
| The Pea | ce of | Paris.   | and its and       | malica  |     |          |          |
| Nemm    | A 11  | having   | previously        | denogad | hta | brother  |          |
| TITLE . | au,   | ma triff | L. C. L. TO COLLA | workstu | m13 | DIGITAL. | M3 (3.01 |

| The Peace of Paris, | and its and | malies      |          |        |
|---------------------|-------------|-------------|----------|--------|
| Nizam Ali, having   | previously  | deposed his | brother, | Balabu |

| Nızam | Ali, | having | previously | deposed | his | brother. | Salaba |
|-------|------|--------|------------|---------|-----|----------|--------|
| Jung  | puts | him to | death      | •       |     | •        | Damou  |
|       |      |        |            |         |     |          |        |

- 1765 Clive induces the Emperor to make Mahomed Ali independent of Hyderabad

  - He acquires the Northern Sirkars for the Company
- 1766 Treaty with the Nizam, 12th November

  - Rise of Hyder Ali
- 1755 He lays the foundation of his fortunes ...
- 1757 Peshwa besieges Seringapatam, which is relieved by Hyder ..
- 1760 Hyder assists Lally, gains an advantage over the English
- 1761 His extreme danger, recovers his position, and uturns the throne
  - 323
- 1763 He conquers Reduces, and constructs a navy
- 1761 Accession of Madhoo Rao as Peshwa
- 324 1763 Nizam Ali invades the Mahratta dominions, and is defeated by Rachoba

  - 325 325
- 1765 Hyder defeated by the Mahrattas with great loss 1 66 Confederacy of the Nizam and the Mahrattas against Hyder.
  - the Madras Government drawn into it
  - 326
- 1767 The Mahrattas constrain Hyder to make peace The Nizam deserts his English allies and joins Hyde-
  - 327 327 Nizam and Hyder defeated at Changama 323
  - Expedition from Bengal arginst the Aizam
  - 328
- 1763 He hadens to make peace, treaty of the 23rd of Febinary
  - 829 Hyder proceeds to the western coast to repel an English invasion 330
- 331
- Campaign of 1763 unfavourable to the English 1769 Hyder dictates peace under the walls of Madras
  - 333
- 1770-1771 War between the Mahrattas and Hyder 1771 He is completely defeated at Milgota
  - He demands and of the English in accordance with the treaty.
  - but in vain
  - Sir John Lindsay sent as the Kings representative to Mahomed Ab
- 1769 Mahrattas agam mvade Hindostan
- 1771 The Emperor throws himself on them and is installed at
  - Delhi
- 1772 The Mahrattas invade Pohilcund the bond of forty lang
  - The Mahrattas and the Emperor fall out, the Emperor obliged
  - to submit
- 1773 The Mahrattas enter Pohilcond for the invasion of Onde. their plans disconcerted, they retreat to their own country

| xviii        | COALLAIS  |      |        |         |       | Page       |
|--------------|---|------|--------|---------|-------|------------|
| Date1770 | The singular anomaly of the Company   | e G  | vernme | ut      |       | 337        |
|              | Its victous constitution Interference of I arhament Financial difficulties of the Company | -    |        |         | -     | 239239 |
| 1778         | The Regulating Act, appointment establishment of the Supreme Court                        | of   | Govern | ior Gen | eral, | 840        |
|              | CHAPTER XI  | 11.  |        |         |       |            |
| 11           | ASTINGS & ACMINISTRATION AND THE M  | ATIE | ATTA W | AB. 177 | 12-1  | 782        |

| 1773 | Warren  | Hasting s antecedents                               | 341 |
|------|---------|---|-----|
|      | The cor | lition of Bengal                                    | 342 |
| 1""2 | Warren. | Hast age appointed Governor of Bengal , his reforms | 313 |
|      |         | + 1 obilla nae                                      |     |

311

345

346

217

317

348

349

349

351

351

352

253

353

251

354

355

S. 5

3 3

356

360

SCO

361

362

17"3 The first I obilia war
1774 D struction of the Pohilles
Pemarks on this transaction

Arrival of the judges of the Supreme Court and the new Councillors
The old Government abol shed the new Government installed

775 Franc s and I is colleagues interfere in the affairs of Oude Death of the old Vizier treaty with his successor The begums clum the treasure and the jayyeers Mr Pris

tow's arrangement Accusations multiplied against Hastings
Clarge brought by Nundu Loomer

Charg 1y h s son and Munny begum

Nun lu koomar executed on a charge of forgery brought by a nativo

Pemarks on this transaction
The Court of Directors condemn Hastings
1°76 He tenders his resignation through his agent and retricts it 77 General Cavering's violent proceedings in the Council and

1"80 Franc s fights a duel with Ha. ngs, is wounded and ret res from the serv ce 1777 New settlement of the land revenue of Bergal

h a death

17 2 D ath of Madhoo Pao Peshwa Pesources of the Mahratta cmp re at this per od
1 3 Narayun Rao Peshwa news.inated

1° 3 R. ghol a becomes Peshwa 1 74 Re olut on at Poons the Idow of Narayun Pao delivered of a sou Razhola excluded

1755-17 2 Alla rs of Gurerat 357
1775 Parhoba negot ates with the Bombay government 358
Treaty concluded 358
Bombay government send a fo ce to b said, battle of Arras 359

Mahrat as driven back to the Norbudda Treaty with Raghola disallo red at Calcutta 1°76 Colonel Upton sent to Poons who conclude the Treaty of

Poora fer remarks on it Treat) of locatal rds ppro cd in Lugland

Date. 1777 A French envoy received at Poons 1778 Revolution in favour of Raghoba at Poons Counter revolution against him

Treaty with Sindia

|      | state Raghoba   | 365 |
|------|---|-----|
| 1779 | Its disastrous termination                              | 366 |
|      | Disgraceful convention of Wargaum                       | 366 |
| 1778 | General Goddar I s expedition across India              | 367 |
|      | War between France and England                          | 383 |
| 1779 | General Goddar I reaches Surat safely                   | 369 |
|      | Convention of Wurgaum disallowed at Bombay and Calcutta | 269 |
|      | Rarl oba sent by Sindia to Hindostan, and escapes       | 369 |
|      | General Goddard a specess in Gizerat                    | 3~0 |

CONTENTS

The Bombay government send ar expedition to Poons to rein

TIT Page

363

363

264

376

377

378

|      | General Goddard a specess in G merat |     | 3-0 |
|------|--------------------------------------|-----|-----|
| 1780 | Capture of Gwalior by Major Popham   |     | 371 |
| 1"81 | Sindia s force defeated              |     | 373 |
| 1770 | Confederacy against the English      | •   | 373 |
| 1780 | General Goldard captures Bassem      |  | 374 |
|      |                                      |     |     |

| 1780 | General Goldard captures Bassein                           | 374 |
|------|--|-----|
|      | Hartley gallantly repulses the Mahrattas                   | 374 |
| 1781 | Failure of General Goddard's expedition to Poona           | 375 |
| 1773 | Poghoojee Bhonslay sends an expedition to Bengal which is  |     |
|      | neutralized by Hastings                                    | 375 |
| 1781 | Hastings conds an expedition under Colonel Pearce down the |     | |      | coast to Madras  | 375 |
|      | Colonel Pears a treated with Lindness by Rochouse Bhonslay | 376 |

Nana Furnavese hesitates to ratify it till the death of Hyder

1782 Treaty of Salbye with the Mahrattas negotiated by Sindia

CONTENTS

| XX CONTENTS  |            |          |         |       |      |
|--|------------|----------|---------|-------|------|
|  |            |          |         | P     | age  |
| Date   |            |          |         |       | 287  |
| 1779 He terminates his d'sputes with Poo                       | na         | *     | ••      |       | 383  |
| 1780 His great preparations for war                            |            | -        | -       |       | 389. |
| He bursts on the Carnatic                                      |            |       |         |       | 389  |
| Stupefaction of the Madras Council                             |            |          | ••      |       |      |
| Total destruction of Colonel Baillie                           | s detachi  | nent     | •••     |       | 890  |
| Hastings s energetic measures                                  |            |          |         |       | 391  |
| He suspends the Givernor of Madr                               | 89         |          |         |       | 392  |
| Sir Eyre Coote goes to Madras and                              | takes the  | comm     | and of  | the   |      |
| аттоу  |            | -        |         |       | 392  |
| 1781 Gallant defence of Wandewash by I                         | t Flint    |          |         |       | 393  |
| Battle of Porto Novo   |            | -        |         |       | 893  |
| Arrivel of the Bengal force                                    |            | -        |         |       | 394  |
| Battle of Pollulore  |            | _        |         |       | 394  |
| Battle of Solingur   |            |          | . "     |       | 395  |
| Lord Macariney Governor of Madr                                |            | ••       | ••••    | •     | 395  |
| Lord Macariney Governor of Made                                | 20         |          |      |       | 396  |
| Capture of Negrpatam   | •          | ••       |         | ••    | 396  |
| 1782 Capture of Trincomales The revenues of the Carnatic taker |            | dha Da   | 40.10   |       | 396  |
| The revenues of the Carmatic taker                             | over by    | the Kn   | Rustr   |       | 307  |
| Defeat of Colonel Brathwaite by T                              | tbboa      |          | ***     |       |      |
| Despondent feelings of Hyder                                   |            | "        |         |       | 398  |
| Relieved by the arrival of a French                            | a expeant  | lon.     |         |       | 303  |
| Naval actions between the English                              | and Fren   | ich      | *    |     | 399  |
| Indecisive action before Arnee                                 | •          | ••       |         | *  | 399  |
| French capture Trancomalee                                     |            | *     |         |    | 400  |
| Admiral Hughes sails for Bombay                                | •          | *     | *    |    | 400  |
| Great storm at Madras  | *       | *     |         |    | 401  |
| Famine at Madras   |            | *     | *    |       | 401  |
| Operations on the Malabar Coast                                |            | *     | *    |       | 401  |
| Tippoo sent to oppose an English                               | force ther | 07       |         |       | 407  |
| Death of Hyder December 7th                                    |            |          |         |       | 402  |
| Tippoo suddenly breaks up his e                                | amp and    | hasten   | s back  | , 83- |      |
| sames the royal authority                                      |            |          |         |       | 403  |
| 1783 Culpable supmeness of General S                           |            | iadras   | ,.      |       | 403  |
| Tippoo returns to the Malabar Co                               | ast        |          |         | ••    | 403  |
| Arrival of Bussy with a French fo                              | rce        | *     |       | *  | 401  |
| General Stuart proceeds against h                              | ım to Cu   | idalore  |         |    | 401  |
| haval action between the French                                | and Lng    | ash      | •       | ••    | 405  |
| Operations before Cuddalore                                    |            |        | *    |     | 405  |
| Peace between France and Engla                                 | nd         |          | -       |     | 405  |
| General Stuart arrested and sent                               | ome        | *     | *    |       | 405  |
| Lapedit on from Bombay to Bedi                                 | iore       |          |      | *  | 406  |
| Tippoo reconquera Be incre                                     |            |          | *    |       | 403  |
| He undertakes the sege of Mang                                 | alore      |          | -       |    | 403  |
| Tatraordinary defence of it it                                 | urrenders  | . =      | -       |     | 407  |
| Progress of Colonel Fullerton as                               | rmy town   | rus Ber  | ingapal | am    | 403  |
| Madras enters into negotiations                                | run Tipp   | 00 не    | cajoles | them  | 403  |
| Colonel Fullerton stopped in the                               | Fine of A  | record p | А гре у | adras |      |
| 1784 Disreputable treaty of Mangalor                           |            | -        | *    | -     | 402  |
| See Lamping therit of Municipal                                | •          | €-       | -       | *  | 410  |
|  |            |          |         |       |      |
|  |            |          |         |       |      |

CHAPTER XV.

| Trastings's Administration—The Supreme Court. Proceedings in England 1774—1784 |      |      |
|--|------|------|
| Date   |      | Page |
| 1774 Encroachments of the Supreme Court  |      | 411  |
| 1775 Dismay of the Zemindars   | •••  | 411  |
| 1775-1779 The Court interferes with the collections, and para                  |      | 7.1  |
| the whole system of government   | Jes  | 412  |
| 1779 The Cossijura case  |      | 412  |
| Hastings resists the violence of the Supreme Court                             | ••   |      |
| Trastings resists the violence of the Supreme Court                            |      | 413  |
| 1780 Sir Elijah Impey made chief Judge of the Sudder Court                     |      | 414  |
| Remarks on this arrangement  |      | 414  |
| Extraordinary aid demanded of Cheyt Sing                                       |      | 415  |
| 1781 He is fined fifty lacs by Hastings, he escapes across the                 | lver | 416  |
| Hastings a danger, he escapes to Chunar  |      | 417  |
| Capture of Bidgegur, and distribution of the booty                             |      | 417  |
| 1782 The begums of Oude, their spoliation                                      |      | 418  |
| 1780 Proceedings against Fyzoolia Khan   |      | 420  |
| 1783 Court of Directors censure Hastings, he resigns                           | -    | 421  |
| 1785 His reception in England, all impeachment                                 |      | 422  |
| 1786 Charges against him   | •    | 423  |
| The three principal charges  | -    | 424  |
| 1788 Commencement of his trial   |      | 425  |
| 1795 His acquittal   |      | 427  |
|  |      |      |
| Remarks on his public character and administration                             |      | 427  |
| I 81-1782 Parliament appoint a Select and a Secret Committee                   | •    | 428  |
| 1782 Motion for the recall of Hastings   | •••• | 429  |
| 1783 Fox s India Bill  | •    | 430  |
| 1784 Defeated in the House of Lords  | * | 432  |
| Pitts India Bill   |      | 482  |
| Comparison of the two Bills  |      | 434  |
| The Nabob of Arcot s debts, their origin, their nefarious of                   | ha-  |      |
| racter   |      | 435  |
| 1785 Mr Dundas orders them to be paid off without inquiry                      |      | 436  |
| 1785 Court of Directors temopstrate against this injustice, Burl               | ce 8 |      |
| celebrated speech  |      | 435  |
| Sequel of the Nabob of Arcot a debta   |      | 437  |
| The two dark spots in the Indian Administration                                | -    | 435  |
| The revenues of the Carnatic ordered from home to be                           | re-  | -    |
| stored; opposition of Lord Macarteny   |      | 433  |

THE HISTORY OF INDIA.

CHAPTER I

EARLY HISTORY TO THE GHUZNI INVASION

INDIA is bounded on the north and the east by the Hunalayu mountains, on the west by the Indus, and on the south by the sea. Its length from Cashmere to Cape Comorin is 1,900 miles, its breadth from Kurrachee to Sudiva, in Assam, 1,500 miles The superficial contents are 1,287,000 miles, and the population, under British and native rule, is now estimated at 200,000,000 crossed from east to west by a chain of mountains called the Vindya, at the base of which flows the Nerbudda country to the north of this river is generally designated Hindostan, and that to the south of it the Deccan Hindostan is composed of the basin of the Indus on one side, and of the Ganges on the other, with the great sandy desert on the west, and an elevated tract now called, from its position, Central India The Decean has on its northern boundary a chain of mountains running parallel with the Vindya, to the south of which stretches a table land of triangular form, terminating at Cape Comorin, with the western Ghauts, on the western coast, and the eastern Ghauts, of minor altitude, on the opposite coast. Between the Ghauts and the sea lies a narrow belt of land which runs round the whole peninsula.

ų

Of the ancient history on chronology of the * Hindoos there are no credible memorials. The history was compiled by poets, who drew on their imagination for their facts, and the chronology was computed by astronomers, who have made the specessive ages of the world to correspond with the conjunctions of the heavenly bodies. The age of the world is thus divided into four periods; the sugar yogu, extending to 1.728,000, and the second, or treta yogu, to 1,296,000 years; the third, or the diverger yogu, comprises 861,000 years; and the fourth, or Luke yogu, is predicted to last 132,000 years. A Lulpa, or a day of Brumha, is composed of a thousand such periods, or 4,320,000,000 years. Extravagant as these calculations may appear, they are outdone by the Burmese, who affirm that the lives of the ancient inhabitants extended to a period equal to the sum of every drop of rain which falls on the surface of the globe in three vears. The dates given for the first three ages must, therefore, be rejected as altogether imaginary, while the com-

India is designated by native writers Bharutvusu, from king Bharut, who is said to have reigned over the whole country. That he did not enjoy less one of the earliest and most renowned of its rulers; but this fact loses all historical value when we are told in the shasters that he reigned ten thousund years, and, on his death, was transformed into a deer. Thus do we ploil our way through darkuess and mystery; at every step fact is confounded with fable, and all our researches end only in conjecture. The original settlers are identified with the various titles of Bheels, Celes, Gonds, Meenss, and Chooars, still living in a state almost of nature, in the forests of the Soane, the Norbudda, and the Muhanuddee, and in the hills of Surgoon and Chota Nagpore. Their languages have no

mencument of the fourth, or present age, which corresponds, to a certain degree, with the authentic errs of other nations.

may be received as generally correct.

1.1

affinity with the Sanscrit, and their religion differs from Hin-In those fastnesses, anidst all the revolutious which have convulsed India, they have continued to maintain un changed, their original simplicity of halits, creed, and speech They were apparently driven from the plams by fre h colomes of emigrants, and these were in their turn conquered by the Hindoos who brought their religion and language with them from regions beyond the In lus, and, having reduced the inha bitints to a servile condition, branded them with the name of soodras Of the four Hind to eastes, three are designated the twice born which seen to indicate that they all belonged to the conquering race, although the term is now applied exclu sively to brahmins In the Institutes of Munoo reference is also made to cities governed by soodras, which the twice born were forbidden to enter, and the allusion evidently applies to soodra chiefs who continued to maintain their independence after the Hundon invasion

The Hindoos who originally crossed the Indus took possess on of a small tract of land, 100 miles north west of Delhi aport 65 miles by 80, which was considered the residence of gods and holy sages while the I rahmins appear to have subsequently occup ed the country north of the Jumns and the Ganges, stretching to the confines of north Behar. The India of the \cdus of Munoo, and the earliest writers was exclusively confined to the region north of the Nerbudda and comprised but'a small portion even of that limited quarter It was in the north that the four places of greatest sanctity were situated during the early ages though the Deccan now contains many places of distinguished ment. The north was also the seat of the solar and lunar races the scene of claval rots adventures, and the abode of all those who are celebrate I In the legends, the mythology and the ph losophy of the Hin loss Even in the polished age in wh. In the Ramyun and the Muhall arut were composed, the south was the land of falle the dwell ig of lears and monkeys and it was not till a very late period that these apes and goblins an i mon sters were transformed into orthodox Hindoos It must, " therefore, be distinctly berne in mind that the revolutions described in the sacred books of the Hindoos belong to Hindostan, and not to the Deccan

Some of the Pooraus describe India as having The ton dusions and been formerly divided into ten kingdoms, of languages these five were situated in Hindostan,-Surus wuttee, comprising the Punjab, Cunous embracing Delhi, Acra, and Oude. Turboot, from the Coosee to the Gunduk. Gour, or Bengal, with a portion of Behar, and Guzerat, which evidently included Candesh, and part of Malwa Five are assigned to the Deccan .- Muharastru, or the Mahratta country on the western coast, and Orissa on the eastern coast, Telmgan, lying between the Godavery and the Kistna, Dravira, or the Tamul country, stretching down to Cape Comoran, and Carnata on the western face of the peninsula In correspondence with these divisions, which are compara tively modern, ten languages, of similar names, are enumerated as being current in them. Of these, the language of the five divisions of Hindostan, as well as the Mahratta and the Orissa are branches of the Sanscrit, modified by the mix ture of local and foreign words, and new inflections. The Teloogoo-spoken in Telingana-as well as the Tamul and the Carnata belong, however, to a distinct family, and the only Sanscrit words found in them are those which have reference to religious observances. The brahimins, crossing the Indas, brought their own language from the west, where it was in constant use—as the ancient inscriptions in Persia testify-and diffused it through the north of India in connection with their religion. It thus became gradually mixed up with the dialects of the different provinces, which at length lost their original distinctions The word Sanscrit significa refined, and that languages bears every indication of having received the improvements of the literati for many centuries, till it became the most exquisite medium of communication in the world.

17 The worship taught in the Vedus was the The Vetre earliest form of the Hindoo rel gion, and was introduced into Hindostan by a body of priest, who crossed the Indus either in the train of a conqueror or on a mi, sion of proselytism, possibly 1 400 years before our era. The Vedus are r collection of hymns, prayers, and precepts, composed by different authors, at different periods and were delivered down orally till the time of Vyasu, the bastard son of a fi.herwoman, though, on his father's side, of royal lineage, who employed four brahmms to collect and arrange them. Their leading doctrine is the unity of God, and the various divinities, the personification of the elements, whom the devotee is required to invoke, are manifestations of the Supreme Being The gods are mentioned, it is true, but without any preemmence, and never as objects of adoration, and there is no trace of the legends of Krishnu and Sivu to be found in them In that early age, indeed, there appears to have been no images, and no visible types of worship Though the cu toms and habits of the Hindoos are said to be immutable. vet, strange to say in a country which still regards the Vedus with profound veneration as the great fountain of religion, the ritual they prescribe has become so obsolete that the man who ventured to regulate his devotions by it would be con sidered in the light of an infidel Next in order comes the work called the Institutes of Munoo," a code of rules and pre certs, religious and secular, collected together about 900 years before our tra and attributed to Munoo It inculcates the worship of the elements, of the heavenly bodies and of in ferior detties, but none of the objects of modern worship are alluded to Brumha is mentioned more than once but the names of Vi haoo and Sivu do not occur Idols are noticed and one passage enjoins that they shall be respected but the adoration of them is discountenanced. The caste of brahmins is in this code placed o i an equality with the god. and endowed with extraordinary privileges, but they were at the same time married at an early age to Seeta, the daughter of the lang of Mithila, another branch of the solar line, whose capital lay within a hundred miles of Oud. He passed many years with her in religious retirement in the forest till she was carried off by Ravunu, the king of Ceylon Rama assembled a large aimy, and having in his progress secured the assistance of the king of the monkeys, marched southward through the great forest of Dunduku, which terminated on the banks of the Cavery That forest is described as the abode of foly sages and devotees, and of anes and bears Crossing the Cavery. Panu entered on Junustan, or the abode of men-the contmental territory of Ravunu. The expedition was crowned with success, and Ramu recovered his wife, but having in advertently caused the death of his brother, he cast himself into a river, and as the Hindoo writers affirm, was reunited to the derty The expedition of Rumu was the most chivalrous exploit of that age, more especially when we consider the very limited resources of the lingdom of Oude, with two in dependent sovereigns-one at Mithila, and the othe at Benarcs.-within a hundred and fifty miles of his capital He is, perhaps, the earliest of deified heroes, as his age is generally fixed at 1,200 years before our era, though on calculations by no means satisfactory calculations by no minns satisfactory

The maximum and the heroic age of India subarut was it a great war, celebrated in another Hindoo spic, the Minribhardt Tho main object of this poem is to commemorate the exploits of Krishny, another defined hero who took a prominent part in the contest between the Pand so and the Kooroos, two branches of the lumar line, for the possession of Hustimapore, situated in the neighbourhood of Dellin Toodistheer, the chief of the Pando s, wis resolved, it is said, to celebrate the sacrifice of the lorse which impled the possession of supreme dominion. The K croos burnea with indignation at this arrog in assumption, and their chief, unable to precent it, but fricourse to rathe. He capaged Toodistheer in deep play, and led him on to stake his wife and his kingdom, both of which were lost at one throw of the dice, and he was obliged to go into exile for twelve years. Krishnu, a seion of the royal family at Muttri, on the Ganges, had already signalized himself in a conflict with the king of Mugudu, in south Behar, and now, in conjunction with Buluram, accompanied Yoodistheer and his four brothers in their exile The heroes wandered through the various provinces of India, performing notable feats of valour, and leaving some memorial of their romantic adventures in every direction the close of the period of exile Yoodistheer returned with his companions to the banks of the Jumua, and demanded the restoration of his kingdom His opponent, Dooryudhun, refused his claun, and declared that he should not have as much land as could be covered by the point of a needle There remained, therefore, no alternative but to decide the question by an appeal to arms In this great battle fought on the plain, where, hooroo-kahetru, in after time, the last decisive battle between the Hindoos and the Mahomedans took place, all the tribes in northern India were ranged on one side or the other Chiefs from Culinga, the sea coast of Orissa, and even the Yuvunsthe name generally given to the residents beyond the Indusare said to have taken a share in it. It lasted eighteen days, and the carnage on both sides was producious Doorvudium was at length slun, and victory declared for the Pandoos, but when Yoodistheer beheld the field covered with the bodies of friends and foes all descended from a common ancestor, he became disgusted with the world and determined to withdraw from it He entered Hustinapore and performed the funeral obseques of his rival, after which he placed the grandson of his brother Urioon on the thione, and retired to Dwarka, in Guzerat, ra company with Krishnu, who had founded a kingdom there cThat here was soon after slam "at the fountain of the lotus, by one of the wild foresters of the tribe of the Bheels Yoodistheer proceeded through Sinds towards the north, and is supposed to have penshed in the snowy range According to the popular notion, he ascended to heaven, which was ly no means incredible, as the paradise of more than one of the Hindoo detties is placed on the inaccessible reaks of the Hindhavu

x٦

Inducace of these two events, the expedition of Ramu, and the buttle of Kooroo kshetru, are the most important in the annals of the luxan and the solar race

The gen us of poetry has fixed the admiration of a hundred generations on them, and supplied a rich mine of images from age to age The author of the Pamayun was Valmecki whom the gratitude of his fellow countrymen has crowned with the wreath of immortality, by ranking him among those who never did. He is supposed to have flourished in the second century before our era. The same period has also been assigned to the composer of the Muhabharut Indeed, from the terms in which he describes the Juvin Usoor, the demon or cant who engaged in combat with Krishnu, it has been conjectured that the poem must have been written after the any suon of Alexander the Great. The author was Vyasu, who has been confounded, through agnorance or flatters, with the great man who collected the Vedus, which is chronologically impossible It is, moreover said, that a Vyasu appears in every age, though it is certain that no second Vyasu has since appeared among the poets of India Krishnu was defied after his death. His adventures, and more particularly his fliritations with the milkmaids have ren dered 1 im the most popular of gods among an amorous people, but the sects founded on the worst ip of Ramu krishnu, and other deities, are among the more modern innovations of Hindonism Buluram the brother of Krishnu, a said to have founded a king lom, of which Palibothra, the capital became the wonder of India, though even the site of it is now matter of conjecture

The Takbok The annals of Hindostan for several centuries after the assumed period of the great war, are involved in impenetrable obscurity, but it would appear that about six centuries before our era, a new swarm from the teeming hive of Scythia poured across the Indus upon the plans of India Another swarm is supposed to have moved down at the same time on the north of Europe, and settled in Scandinavia, the cradle of the English nation This simultancous emigration to the east and to the west, may assist in explaining that similarity of manners and customs which has been discovered on many , ints between the Scandinavians and the natives of India. These invaders were denominated the Takshuk, or serpent race, because the serpent was said to be their national emblem Under their chief, Suhesnag, they probably overian the northern provinces of Hindostan, and became gradually incorporated with the tribes which had preceded them They flourished for ten generations, and appear to have professed the Boodhist creed. Of this dynasty was Nundu, or Muhanundu, who was scated on the throne when Alexander the Great appeared on the banks of the Sutlege, and was denormated by the Grecian historians, the I mg of the Prasu, or of the east

The extedition The first expedition to India from the west of which we have anything like an authentic record, is that of Darius, the king of Persia, who ascended the throne of Cyrus, in the year 518 before our eig. and extende l his conquests from the sea of Greece to the confines of Inda His admiral, Scylax, was then directed to construct a flotilla on the higher Indus, and proceed down that stream to the ocean The report which he made of the wealth and magnif ice of the country through which he passed, determined Darius to attempt the conquest of it. He crossed the Indus with a lurge army, and succeeded in annexing the countries lordering on that river to his great empire. The pices extent of his conquest cannot be determined, but there is every reason to conclude this Indian province must have been of no meonsiderable magnitude, since it was esteeme ! more valuable than any other satruy, and is said to have furnished one-third the revenues of the Persian empire. This tribute moreover, is said to have been paid in gold while , that from the other divisions west of the Indus was delivered in silver.

It was about the period of the Persian invasion, that Goutumu give a fixed character to the insti-Returnment stutions of Boodhism It has been supposed that all the fifty six tribes of the lunar race profes ed that creed, and Goutumn was reckoned the seventh Boodh He was born at Kupilu. but the seat of the religion was planted at Gva. in the Lingdom of Mugudu, or Behar, which the Chinese and Indo-Chinese nations consider the most sacred spot in the world The Boodhists rejected the whole of the brahaumcal system of gods and goddesses, repudrated the doctrine of casto, and adhered exclusively to the spiritual worship of the Vedus The presthood amongst them was not hereditary, but formed a distinct community, recruited from the secular ranks, bound to observe a vow of celibacy, and to renounce the pleasures The hereditary priesthood of the brahmins, on the contrary, admitted no acces ions from the lay classes, and considered marriage as ind.spensable as investiture with the thread in the hope of giving birth to a son who should perform the funeral rites of his father, and secure him a scat in paridise. The death of Goutumu is fixed by the general concurrence of authorities, in the year 5-0 before our eraserial. The religion of Booth made productions progress best was after the death of Goutuma while the creed of the brahming was confined to the small kingdom of Canouj. Two cutures later, in the region of Asoca Booth in was triumpl and through Hindostan. His celets are still to be seen inscribed on the celebrated column at Delhi, on a similar column in Guzerat and on a third in Cuttrek, as well as in numerous caves and rocks. Boo dhi in was mare duced into Ceylon about the end of the third century bear our era. Shorth after, it spread through Tibet and Tartary, and was carried into China about the year Go. In Hindostan the brahming exhibited the goot rancorous hostility to their powerful rivals, and we assembled his whole force on the bank of the Jelim. The reer, swelled by the periodical rains, and at the time a mile broad, rolled impetuously between the two camps Porus planted a long line of elephants on the margin of the stream, and presented an impenentabe line of defence to his opponent. But Alexander discovered an island in the river, about ten miles above the camp, and took advantage of a dark and tempestuo is night to closs over to it with 11,000 men, who were landed on the opposite bank before dawn The main body of the Greeian army was in the meantime drawn up as usual, facing the Indian camp, and Porus was thus led to believe that the troops who had crossed consisted only of a small brigade But he was speedily undeceived by the rout of the force which he had sent to meet it and the death of his son who was in command, and being now certain that it was Alexander himself who had crossed the river, prepared to encounter him with 4,000 horse and 30 000 foot, all of the kshetriyu tribe, warriors by birth and profession Alexander's small army was composed of veterans, strangers to defeat, and, under such but nothing could withstand the charge of Alexanders cavalry

Porus continued to maintain the conflict long after the great body of his troops had deserted him, but was at length persuaded to yield Alexander, who always honoured and in the constraint of the Academic to the analysis of the constraint of the const manued ever after faithful to his generous victor

After the defeated Porus, Alexander crossed the rears of Chenab and the Ravee and came in contact with a body of Catharan probably Tartar immigrants who maintained an obstinate stringgle which is said to have terminated only after the shughter of 16000, and the captivity of 70000 of their number. On reaching the banks of the Sutlege Alexander heard of the grant Gangetic kingdon of Mugudu, the king of which, it was reported, could bring

30 000 envalry, and 600,000 foot, and 9,000 elephants into the field. He determined to march down and plant his standard on the battlements of its magnificent capital, Palibothra, which was nine miles in length, and his troops received orders to prepare for crossing the river But they were worn out with the fatigue and wounds of eight campaigns, their spirits had moreover been depressed by the deluge of rain to which they had been exposed during the monsoon, and they refused to accompany him any farther He employed menace and flattery by turns, but nothing could shake their resolution, and he was reluctantly obliged to make the Sutlege the limit of his expedition, and return to the Indus, where he caused a large flotilla to be constructed, and sailed down the stream with all the pomp of a conqueror

14

The views of Alexander were gigantic and Alexander a beneficial beyond those of every other ruler projects and death. m ancient times. He had erected the port of Alexandria on the Mediterranean shore of Egypt, and at the end of twenty two centuries it still continues to attest the grandour of his plans He now resolved to establish a coinmercial intercourse between the coast of India the rivers of Persia and the Red Sea For this object he built a city and harbour at the estuary of the Indus, and fitted out a large fleet, which he entrusted to his admiral, Nearchus, with orders to proceed to the mouth of the Euphrates The voyage, though tedious, proved successful, and was pistly considered one of the greatest naval achievements of the age. In the midst of these great projects Alexander caught a jungle fever in the marshes of Babylon, and died two years after his return from India, at the early age of thirty-two He was fully bent on returning to it, and there can be little doubt that if he had succeeded in crossing the Sutlege he would have made a complete conquest of the country, and given it the benefit of Furopean civilization His name does not appear in any Hundoo work-a proof of the lumentable imperfection of the records which have come down to us, but his fame was widely diffused through India by the Mithomed to conquerors, among whom he was esteemed a magnificent hero. It was carried for and wide on the ocean with the stream of their conquests. and the distant islander of Java and Sumatra may be found singing the deeds of the mighty "Iscander" that the Greek writers chiefly derived their knowledge of India After a reign of twenty-four years, Chundra The Mugudu goopta was succeeded by his son, Mitra goopta, kingtom.

z٦

THE MUGUDU KINGDOM

CHAP-

16

with whom Seleucus renewed the treaty. The great kingdom of Mugudu maintained its pre-eminence in the valley of the Ganges, under a succession of royal families who appear to have been either soodras or boodhists, for a period of eight centuries from the year 350 before our era to 450 after it Under their government the country is said to have attained the highest prosperity. A royal road extended from Pali-bothra to the Indus, with a small column at every stage. Another road stretched across the country to Broach, at that time the great emporium of commerce on the western

Ll

cont monuments attest the diffusion of this religion, besides the fact that the language of literature and devotion in Java is a form of the Syscrit. In the fourth century a Chinese pilgrim recorded that the island was peopled by Hindoos, that in its ports he found vessels manned by Hindoo sailors which had sailed from the mouth of the Ganges to Ceylon, and from thence to Java, and were not paring to proceed on to China A Hindoo government existed in Java till within the last 400 years when it was subverted by the Mahomedans Hindooism still continues to flourish in the neighbouring island of Eali, where the fourfold division of caste still survives, and widows are said still to ascend the funeral pile Yet so signal has been the mutation of habits ard opinions among the Hindoos of India, that any Hindoo who mucht visit the country to which his ancestors carned the institutes of his religion, and in which they exist in greater integrity than in India itself, would not be permitted to remain within the rule of the caste

they had gained

18

secondary gods The fountain of fire was purified with water brought from the sacred stream of the Ganges After the performance of expatory rites, each of the four gods formed an image and cast of into the fountain, and there spring up the four men who became the founders of Rupoot granties. They were sent out to combat the monsters, who were slaughtered in great numbers, but as their blood touched the ground fresh demons arose, upon which, the four gods stopped the multiplication of the race by drinking up their Ilood. The infidels thus became extinct, shouts of joy rent the skies, ambrosal showers descended from above and the gods.

drove about the firmament in their cars, exulting in the victory

boodhists were constrained to relinquish were speedily occupied ly the brahmins, and Vishnoo and Sivu displaced Boodh Under the brahmins, the construction of these Case term es حاما ما cave temples was extended an 1 improved Those which they erected at Ellors, in the Deccan, exceed in magnificence anything to be seen elsewhere. In a range of hills which extend five miles in the form of a horse shoe, we these wonderful chambers are covered with figures of the Hindoo gods and goddesse, and representations from the Ramayun and the Muhabharut The pantheon of Ellora seems to have been the citadel of Hindooism when it spread into the Decean The precise age of these magnificent exca vations it is impossible to fix, but it must have been at some period during the ten or twelve centuries which clapsed between the subjugation of the boodhists, and the arrival of the Mahomedans, in the high and palmy state of Hin-doorsm, when the brahmins swayed the ecclesiastical sceptre di cover a range of grotto temples, two and often three stories in height. The most remarkable of them is the temple of Koiles, or the palace of Muhadevu Here is to be found whatever is splended in architecture, or exquisite in sculpture. The scene is crowded with staircases. bridges, changle, columns porticoes, obelisks, and colossal statues, all chi-ciled out of the solid rock. The sides of of India without a rival or an enemy probably visited by his ficet. He still lives in the memory of posterity, and a man of extraordinary liberality is always compared to king Kurau The centuries which elapsed between the decay of the Andras and the invasion of the Valormedans are filled up by the lustorials with barron lists of dynasties and kings which can be turned to no account, and we turn therefore from the history of Hindostan to the appale of the Duccan The early history of the Deccan is less of cure and less remantic than that of the northern division of India All the traditions and records recognise in every province of it a period when the inhabitants did not profess the Hindoo religion The brahminical writers describe them as mountaineers and foresters, coblins, and monsters, but there is every reason to conclude that they had reached a high degree of cavilization at a very early age. Ravunu when attacked by Ramu, was the sovereign of a powerful and civilized state, which embraced not only the island of Cevion. lut the whole of the southern division of the peninsula, and his subjects were, doubtless, for more advanced in the arts and literature than the invaders. A Tamul literature existed before the introduction of brahminism, and some of the best authors in that language were of the trile now stigmaticed as parare which incontestibly proves that the parars were the alengines of the country, and a highly cultivated people who were reduced to subjection and degrated by the trumphant brokens. This remark any hes to the group of tribes comprised in the ancient Telif gana, Draviru and Kerulu ferry

იე

scene of its early power till 1736, when the last of that royal line was conquered by the nabob of Arcot The kingdom of Chola-which some identify with Coromandel-had Cinchi, or Conjectum, for its capital, and retained its visour for many centuries, and, about the eighth century, appears to have extended its authority over a considerable portion of Carmata and Telingapa But its trinces were driven lack and confined to their former limits about the tenth century, and maintained a feet to existence, either as independent sovereigns, or as tributaries to the great Huidoo monarchy of beguynugur, till the province was subdued in the middle of the seventeenth century by Shabjee, the father of Sevajee, the founder of Mahratta greatness

The aucient division of Kerulu included Mala Ken u and bar and Carnata, which are said to have been miraculously peopled with brilining by their champion Purusramu, the renowned destroyer of the kshetriyus Apart from this legend, it would appear that about the second cen tury a colony of brahmins introduced themselves and their religion into this province, which they divided into sixty four districts and governed for a time by an ecclesiastical senate. over which a brahmin was chosen to preside every three years, but they were subsequently subjected to the Pandya kingdom. About the muth century the country was broken into various principalities one of the most i mortant of which, Calicut, was un ler the government of the Hardon /amorin when the Europeans first landed in It dia under Vasco de Gama, in 1498 Of the history of Telugram no authentic records have been discovered but it appears that about the eleventh century the Bellai dynasty attained paramount power in this rigion. They dignified themselves with the title of Raji oots of the Yadoo branch and at one period ex tended their authority over the whole of Carneta Malabar, and Telu gana, but it was extinguished by the Mahomedans in Ori sand 1810 The early annuls of Orissa are equally indistinct. The authentic lustery of the province

does not commence before the year 473 when the Kesari family obtained the throne, and held it till 1131 They were succeeded by the line of Gungu bungsu, who maintained their power till it was subverted by the Mahomedan in 1568 the Mahratta province there are only two facts distinctly visible in history, the existence, more than twenty certuries ago, of the great commercial mart of Tagara, so well known to the Poma is, which has been identified with Deogur, the modern Dowlutabad, and was the capital of a long line of monarchs The other event is the reign of Salivahun All that is known of that prince however, is that he was the son of a rotter, that he headed a succe-sful insurrection, dethroned the reigning family, and established a monarchy so powerful and extensive that it gave rise to an era which has survived him for eighteen centuries, and still continues current in the Deccan death by his sons while hunting, but his infant son, Biro a was conveyed to the fertress of Bhandere, and brought up among the shepherds His mother aroused his ambition by revealings to him the secret of his royal birth, and he im mediate'y proceeded to the court of Chittore, together with the followers hand been able to collect, and was favourably received by the king, but the nobles took umbrage at the f wour shown to an unlnown youth. At this juncture a formidable for cum down upon the country and the chiefs refused to furnish their feudal contingents, but Bappa offered without any hesitation to lead the national troops into the That enemy was the Mahomedans, who now for the first time advanced into the heart of a country destined in after times to form one of their most inacreficent emeires in paradise in the society of the black eyed hours. It was not to be expected, that when the "Faithful," as they were termed, had conquered Africa and Spam, subverted the Persian empire, and looked on Europe as already their own, the rich provinces of India, which had been for ages the pray of every invader, should escape their not co

Within a few years after the death of Mahomed. First Mahousethe Calinh Omar founded Bussorah, at the estuary of the Tigris, and despatched an army into the province of

Sinde The invasion was repeated under his successors, but it was not till the days of Walid, that any successful effort was made to obtain a footing in the country Between the years 700 and 715, he not only made an entire conquest of the province, but carried his victorious army to the banks of the Ganges It was the generals of this caliph who crossed the Struts of Gibraltar, planted the standard of the crescent on the soil of Europe, and subdued Spain in a single campaign So lofts was the ambition which animated the early successors of Mahomed, that their arms were triumphant at the same time on the banks of the Ebro and the Ganges, and they aspired to the conquest both of Europe and India. Three homedan wives, and left a numerous propen, It was about this period that the Piumura on Chittors family, which had ruled for many centuries at Oojein, is supposed to have lost its authority in the north of India, and other kingdoms rose on its ruins occupied the districts around Delhi, and made that city their capital Guzerat became independent, and was governed at first by the Chouras and then by the Solankis The Rapport annalists state, that in the days of Khoman, the great grandson of Bappa, whose reign extended from 812 to 836, Chittone was again invaded by the Mahomedans under Mahmoon, the governor of Khorasan, probably the son of the celebrated Calinh, Haroun al Raslud, the contemporary and friend of Charlemagne The other princes in the north of India hastened to the assistance of the Ramouts around the common enemy, and the national bard gives an animated description of the different tribes who composed the chiralry of the north on this occasion. With the aid of these allies, Khoman defeated and expelled the Musulmans, with whom he is said to have fought no fewer than twenty four engage ments For a century and a half after this period, we hear of no further Mahomedan invasion, and it cannot but appear a very notable circumstance, that while the followers of the Prophet completely subjugated Persia and Spain in two or three campaigns, the resistance which they met in their early encounters with the Hindres was so compact and reschite, that nearly three centuries clapsed after the first invasion, before they could make any permanent impression on India and applied to the king of Cunouj for a supply of brahmins well versed in the Hindoo shasters and observances. That monarch, about muse continues ago sent him five brahmins, from whom all the brahminical fumilies in Bengal trace their descent, while the kayusts, the next in order, derive their origin from the five servants who attended the priests

FCHAP

CHAPTER II.

FLOW THE DYVASTY OF GRUZVI TO THAT OF TOGHLUK, 1009—1321

Gluzui. On the death of his jatron, a confroversy are about the succession, and Aluptugeen voted against his son who was, however, rused to the throne by the other check-Aluptugeen having thus meurred his resentment, retreated to his own government, and declared himself independent, and after defeating two armies sent against him, was allowed to remain numblested. He had purchased a slave of Turlistan, of the name of Subuktugeen, who, though claiming descent from the fullestrous Person dynasty of the Sessandes had been reduced to the most abject povers. His instact, who had discovered great powers of mind in him, gradually rused him to such trust and power, that he became the first subject in the kingdom, and in 976 succeeded to the throne.

FURAP

The provinces in the extreme north of India, and more particularly the Pumpb had for many centuries been linked with the fertunes and policy of Cil al and Candah ir which by to the west of the Indus Hence the establishment of a powerful Mahomedan Lingdom, under a vigorous ruler, at no greater distance from the frontier of India than Ghuzm, gave no little disquietude to Jeynal the Hindoo ch of of I abore He determined to auticipate any designs which Subul tuggen might form on India, and crossed the Indus with a large army to Lughman, at the entrance of the valley which extends from Peshawur to Cabul, where he was met l v that prince While the two armies faced each other, a violent tempest of wind, run, and thunder arose, which is said to have terrified the superstitious soldiers of Jeypal to such a degree as to construin him to sue for an accommodation that le might escape to his own country The Hindoo was the aggressor, and the treaty was not granted except on the surrender of fifty elephants and the promise of a large sum of money The envoys of Subul tugeen followed Jeypul to Lahore for paymen , but ou hearing that his opponent hid leen obliged to march towards the west to repel an invasion. he was disposed to withhold it. The brahmins, sais the native listoman, stood on the right of the throne, and urged him to refuse the tribute, since there was nothing to be any longer apprehended from Gluzaii, while his labeltry officers, standing on the left, reminded him of the Sufferings beyond the Indus which had extorted the contribution, and, above all, of his royal word which he had pledged to the Mahomedan prince. In an evil hour, Jeypal listened to the priests, and impusoned the envoys. Subuktugen speedly disposed of his encimes in the west, and marched with a large army towards the Indus, breathing vengeance agrunst the author of the insult. Jeypal, notwithstanding his perfidy, succeeded in enlisting the aid of the kings of Delhi, Ajmere, Gelinjer, and Cumouj, and advanced across the Indus, it is said, with 100,000 horse and countless infantry. The Hindoos were utterly routed, and pursued to the banks of the river. Subuktugeen found a rich olunder in their camp, and obliged all the tribes up to the Indus to submit to his authority.

Submitageen died in 997, and was succeeded, in the first instance, by his son Ismael, but the was an assent interption. Not in the first instance, by his son Ismael, but the was renowned. Mahmood of Ghuzin, who inflicted the serverest blow on the Hindoo power which it had ever experienced since its original establishment in India. From his ently youth Mahmood had accompanied his father in his numerous expeditions, and thus acquired a passion and a talent for war. He succeeded to the re-overces of the hingstom at the age of thirty, burning with ambition to enlarge its boundaries. Hiving spent the first four years of his reign in consoliditing his government west of the Indias, he case his eye on the rich splanns of Hindostan filled with workers, and invested with a romantic interest. In addition to the wealth he might acquire, the glory of extending the trumphs of Mahomedaius hirrogshnew and unknown regions, possessed an irresistible chain for his mind. He began his cru® die against the Hindoos in the year 1001, and conducted no fewer than twelve expeditions against the northern provinces, which, being held by across mide, product; frience, fell an every prey to his arma.

He left Ghuzni in August with 10,000 chosen horse, and was met at Pushawar by his father's old antagonist, Jeanal, who was totally defeated and taken pusoner, but released on the promise of paying Cibute According to the Persian historian, it was a custom or law of the Hindoos that a trince who had been twice defeated by the Mahomedan arms was considered unworthy to reign Jeyral, therefore, resigned the throne to his son Anungial, and closed the misfortunes of his reign by ascending the funeral rive in regal state Some of the chiefs subordinate to Lahore, however, refused to payethe contributions demanded of them, among whom was the rain of Bhutnere situated at the northern extremity of the Bikaueer desert. The Sultan proceeded against him. the fort was taken after a siege of three days, and the prince. to word falling into the hands of the victor, fell upon his own hroma

Milmood's third expedition was undertaken to ttle third and subdue Dacod, whom he had left governor of fourth expedi Mooltan, but who, under the encouragement of Anungpal, had revolted against his master Mooltan was invested for seven days, but an irruption of the Tarturs from beyond the Oxus, constrained Mahmood to accept the submissions of the governor Having succeeded in driving the Tartars back to their seats, he returned to India on his fourth expedition to chastise Anungoal for the revolule had instigated, and for his repeated perfidies. That mince had sent envoys to the Hindeo monarchs in the north of Hindestan to the kings of Oojem Calinjer, Gwalior, Cunous Delhi and Amere, who formed a confederation and assembled the largest army which had as yet taken the field against the Mahomedans The Hindoo women are said to have melted down their gold ornaments and sold their sewels to sumor. the war, which was considered holy The Hindoo troops again crossed the Indus and advanced to Peshavur, where the two armies were encumped opposite to each other for forty days. before joining issue Mahmood at length commenced the engagement by a large body of archers, but they were driven back with the loss of 5 000, by the impetuosity of the bareheaded and bare footed Gulkers, a tribe of savages, hing in the hills and fastnesses to the east of the Indus, the ancistors of the modern Jauts The battle was long doubtful, but was at length decided by the flight of the wounded elephant of Anungpal, when the whole body of Hindoos, no longer having their leader before their eyes, dispersed in utter dis-order, leaving 20,000 dead on the field. Mahmood determined to allow them no time to rally, but on reaching the Punjab found their discompture so complete so as to afford him leisure for a plundering expedition to the Nagarcote, 1008 temple of Nagarcote, north-west of Lahore, a place of peculiar sanctity, built over a natural flame which issued from the mountain, and was the origin of its religious renown It was so strongly fortified as to be deemed impregnable, it was therefore selected as the depository of the wealth of the neighbourhood, and was said at this time to contain a greater quantity of gold, silver, precious stones, and pearls than was to be found in the treasury of any prince on earth It was, however, captured with case, and Mahmood

n 1

DESTRUCTION OF CUNGUE sent off to Ghuzni, which now began to wear the appearance of a Hindoo city

LCII 7 L

82

During the next three years Mahmood was en-Capture of gaged in two expeditions to Cashimere, of minor consequence-reckoned the seventh and eighth, after which he subdued the whole of Transoxiana, and extended his dominion to the Caspian sea. In the year 1017 he resolved to penetrate to the heart of Hindostan and assembled an army of 100,000 horse and 20,000 foot, drawn chiefly from the recently conquered provinces, the inhabitants of which were allured to his standard by the love of plunder and of adventure He set out from Pe hawur, and passed three months in slirting the hills, after which he marched southward and presented himself unexpectedly before the city of Cunous which had been renowned in Hindoo history for twenty centuries

description given of its grandear, loth by Hindoo and Mahomedan writers, staggers our I clief more e-pecully when we consider the limited extent of the limitlem, and the eve with which it was subdued on this occasion army is said to have consisted of 80,000 men in armour, 30,000

TT 3

as not to be worth more than two rupees a head Passing over two expeditions of less moment, we come to the last and most celebrated in which

Mahmood was engaged, and which is considered by the Mahomedans as the model of a religious crusade—the capture and plunder of Somnath This shrine was at the time one or the most wealthy and celebrated in India. It is affirmed that at the period of an eclipse it was crowded with 200,000 filgrims, that it was endowed with the rent of 2,000 villages and that the image was duly bathed with water, brought from the sacred stream of the Ganges, a distance of 1,000 miles. Its establishment consisted of 2,000 brahmins, 300 barbers to shave the pilgrims when their vows were accomplished, 200 musicians, and 300 courtesans. To reach the temple Mahmood was obliged to cross the desert with his army, 350 miles in extent, by no means the least arduous of his exploits He appeared unexpectedly before the capital of the province, and the rap, though considered one of the most powerful princes in India, was constrained to abandon it and take to flight Pursuing his route to the temple the sultan found it situated on a peninsula connected with the main land by a fortified isthmus, which was manned at every roint with emergency, and then leaping into the saddle cheered on his troops. Ashamed to abandon a prince under whom they had so often fought and bled they rushed on their enemies with an impetuously which nothing could withstand Face thousand Huidoos fell under their sabres, and the remainder rushed to their boats On entering the temple Malimood was struck with its grandeur. The lofty roof was supported by fifty six pillars currously carved and richly stud led with precious stones. The external light was excluded, and the shinne was lighted by a single lamp, suspended by a golden chain, the lastre of which was reflected from the numerous sewels with which the walls were embossed. Facing the entrance stood the lefty idel five yards in height, two of which were buried in the ground Mahmood ordered it to be broken up, where the brahmins cast themselves at his feet and offered ar immense sum to ransom it. His courtiers becought him to accept the offer, and he hesitated for a moment but he soon recovered himself, and exclaimed that he would rather be known as the destroyer than the seller of images He then struck the idel with his mace, his soldiers followed the ex ample, and the figure, which was hollow, speedly burst under their blows, and poured forth a quantity of jewels and diamonds greatly exceeding in value the sum which had been offered for its relemption The wealth acquirtd in this ex pedition exceeded that of any which had preceded it and the mind is bewildered with the enumeration of streasures and jowels estimated by the mann "The sandal wood gates of Sommath were sent as a trophy to Obizan, where they remained for eight centuries till they were brought back to Ind a in a trumphal procession by a Cl ristian ruler Mahmood was so charmed with the hea ity and Mahmoot was so charmed with the beauty and the fertility of the country around Somnath, that empres and likewise to construct a navy to be sent in search of the pearls of Ceylon and the gold of Pegu Bit he had the wisdom to reliminate these projects and having placed a prince of his own choice on the throne of Guzerat, returned to Ghuzni, after a toilsome and perilous march through the desert Two years after, his power reached its culminating point by the conquest of Persia, but his reputation was tarnished by the slaughter of some thousands of the inhabitants of Ispahan, who had obstinately resisted his arms. This execution was the more remarkable, as in all his campaigns in India, he never shed the blood of a Hindoo, except in the heat of battle, or in a siege. Soon after his return from this expedition he expired at his capital in the year 1030, and in the sixtieth of his age. Two days before his death, he caused all the gold and silver and jewels of which he had despoiled India, to be spread out before him, that he might feast his eyes for the last time with the sight and then burst into tears The next day he commanded his army, infantry, cavalry, and elephants, to be drawn up in review

DEATH AND CHARACTER UP MAILMOOD

35

пÌ

before him and wept at the prospect of leaving them

charged with avariee, but if he was rapacious in acquiring wealth, he was noble and judicious in the employment of it Fow Mahomedup princes have ever equalled him in the efficiency of the property of the founded a university at Gluzan, and furnished it with a large collection of eviluable manuscripts, and a museum of natural currosities. He set aside a lac of rupces a year for pensions to learned men and his munficence brought together a larger assembly of literary genus than was to be found in any other Asiatic court. In the space of thirty years, he extended his dominions from the Persian gulf to the sea of Aral and from the mountains of Curdéstan to the bank of the Sullege, yet while in posses sion of this great empire, he considered it his highest glory to be designated the "image breaker". Mainmood left two sons, twins, the elect,

Mahomed, had recommended himself to his father by his gentleness and docility, and was nominated his successor The younger Musacod had become popular with the nobles and the army, by his martial qualities, and within five months of his father's decease, marched to Ghuzu, deprived his brother of his throne and his sight, and made himself king In the year 1034 he conducted an expedition to Cash mere, which he subdued but was recalled to the defence of his dominions by the irruption of a horde of Turki Tarturs. denominated Schuks His father had on one occasion defeated them lut he let them off on easy terms, and they recrossed the Orus in such numbers as to threaten the safety of his empire Among the generals now-sent to oppose their Progress was Jey sen, the commander of Musacod's Indian battalions from which we infer, that even at that early period the Mahomedan invaders found the Hindoos ready to enlist under their banners, and even to cross the Indus and fight their battles The Seljuke offered their submission and were admitted to terms, which only served to increase their am bition and cupidity, Musrood was implifient to renew his attacks on the Hindoos, but was opposed by advice of his wisest councillors, who represented to him that the incessant encroachments of the Seljuks required his exclusive attention. He persisted, however, in marching to India, where he captured the fortress of Hansı but was recalled by a fresh invasion of the ever restless Seliuks Musacod appointed his son governor of the two provinces of Moultan and Labore. which were now permanently annexed to Chuzni, and marched against the invaders in person, but after two years of indecisive warfare, Togrul Beg, the great Seljuk chief, advanced up to the gates of Ghuzm. At length, the two armies met on equal terms, when Musacod was deserted in the field by some of his Turki followers, and totally and irretnevably defeated He then resolved to withdraw to India, in the hope of being able quietly to retrieve his fortunes in that country But his army was totally disorganized, and, on crossing the Indus. deposed him, and restored his brother Mahomed to the throne

The blindness of that prince rendered him incapable of conducting the government, and he transferred it to his son, Ahmed, who e first act was to put the dethroned Musacod to death-in the tenth year of his reign

88

nesur. Hansi, and the Mahomedan possessions south of the Satlege were recovered, and Nagarcote fell after a siege of four months The idel which Mahmood demolished had been miraculously prestried-so at least it was announced-and was now discovered by the brahmins, and installed, the oracle was re established, and the shrine was again enriched by the gifts of princes and people All the other temples which had been subverted were restored, and recovered their sanctity The Hindoos, flushed with success, thought themselves strong enough to expel the followers of the Prophet from the soil of India, and proceeded to lay seige to Lal ore, but after beseiging it seven months, were driven back by a vigorous sally of the besieged Modood expired at Ghuzni, after a reign of nine years, in 1049, and was succeeded by four monarchs in succession, whose insignificant reigns extended over nine years Then come Ibrahim, in 1058, remarkable for his mildness and devotion, whose first act was to mal e peace with the Seljuks, and to confirm them in possession of all the territories they had usurped. He extended the fast of the Ramzan to three months, he attended religious lectures, and bore patiently with priestly rebukes, he gave away large sums in charity, he presented two copies of the Koran of his own beautiful penmanship to the Calith, and then died, after a reach of forty years, leaving thirty six sons and forty daughters The reign of his son, Musacood the second extended over sixteen years, and the throne descended or his death to his son Arslan who immediately imprisoned all his brothers. One of their number, Byram, was, however, so fortunate as to escape to his maternal uncle, the Seliik. monarch, who marched against Arslan, and defcated him. placing Byram on the throne. But on the retirement of the Seljuk army, Arslan refurned and expelled Byram, and was in turn displaced a second fime by Sanjar, the Seljuk general, and soon after overtaken and put to death. Byram, finally assembled the therms in 1118.

Byram governed the k agdom with great wisdo a king of Charat, and moderation, and like all the monarche of his line, extended a liberal pitronage to men of learning Towards the close of his reign, which reached thirty five years, he was involved in a feud with the ruler of Ghore, which cost him his life and his crown His family wis expelled from Ghuzni, and the seat of his kingdom transferred to Lahore, which his son, Khusro, governed for seven years, and then bequeathed to his son, Khusro Malik, under whom all the provinces which had ever been held by the Mahomedans, east of the Indus, were recovered His reign extended to twenty seven years, when he was overpowered by Mahomed. of Ghore, in 1186, and with him the family of Subuktugeen became extinct, at the close of the usual cycle of 200 years The dynasty of Ghore, which superseded that of The dynasty of Ghore. Ghuzni, and rapidly extended its dominion from the Caspian Sea to the Ganges, was flattered by Mahomedan pocts and historians with an ancient and honourable lineage. but the founder of the family was Eiz ood deen Hussein, a native of Afghanistan, of little note He entered the service of Musacod, the king of Ghuzni, and rose in his favour, until he obtained the hand of his daughter, and with it the princi pality of Ghore His son, Kootub ood deen, espoused the daughter of Byram, who put him to death in consequence of some family disputes Seif ood deen, his brother, took up arms to revenge the murder, and captured Ghuzm, from which Byram retreated in baste Sen ood deen, who had sent back the greater part of his army, failed to conciliate his new subjects, and Byram was encouraged to return. He succeeded in defeating and capturng his opponent, whom he put to death under every creumstance of ignorany. His brother, Alla ood deen, on hearing of this trage event, marched with a namerous army to Ghazin, thirsting, to revenge the murder A long an I bloody battle was fought under the walls of the att, which ended in the utter rout of Byram's army, and his retrat to India, during the progress of which, fatigue and misfortune put an end to his life Alla ood dein entered Ghuzn, and gave up this city, then the noblest in Asia, to indiscriminate plunder for three, and, according to some historians, for seven days. The superb monuments of the langs of Ghuzni were destroyed, and the palaces of the nobles sacled, while the most distinguished and increable men in the city were carried into captivity. Whatever provocation Alla cod deen may have received in the murder of his brother, the savage vengeance wreaked on this magnificent capital, has fixed an indebble stain on his memory, and led the historians to stigmatize him as the "incendiary of the world" Alascoders. Alla cod deen, after having satisfied his fury.

- -

40

Chargilisz. at Ghuzni, returned to his capital at Perozekhoh, but was immediately summoned by Sultan Sanjar to make good the tribute which had been usually paid by his predecessor, Byram The demand was refused, and the Schuk Sanjar immediately marched to Ghuzni, and defeated and captured Alla ood deen But on hearing that his own heutenant in Kharism had revolted, and invited the Khitans. a Tartar horde, who had been driven from the north of China. to assist him. Saniar replaced Alla ood deen on the Ghuzmi throne, and marched against this new enemy, by whom he was defeated. He was enabled, however, to recover his strength, but was brought into collision with another tribe of Tartars, generally called the Euz, and though he assembled 100,000 men in the field was totally routed, and made prisoner He died in the course of three years, in 1156, and with him ended the power which the Seljuks had been a century in caude the power which the Sejuks had been a century in building up Alla cod deen deal in the same year, and was succeeded by his son an annable but inexperienced youth, who was killed in the course of the year by one of his own nobles, when his cousin, Chensa cod deen, mounted the throne, and associated has own brother, Shalab ood deen, known in history as the renowned Mahomed Ghory, with him in the government It is a most surgular communitance that in that are of violence, when the love of power overcame all natural affections, and instigated men to the murder of fathers, and brothers, and landred. Mahomed should have continued fathful in allegrance to his feeble brother for twenty nine years. It was he who established the second Mahomedan dynasty at Delhi, generally known as the house of Ghore.

Mahomed Ghory was the real founder of Mahomedan dynasty at Delhi, generally known as the house of Ghore.

Bit a of the service to glance at the condition of the Hindoo thrones in the north, immediately on the eye of their extinction The king of Cunous of the Korah family, had been compelled to make his submission, as already stated, to Mahmood of Ghuzni, which excited the indignation of the neighbouring Hindoo princes, who expelled him from the throne, and put him to death. The kingdom was then occuried by the Rathere tribe of the Raypoots, and five princes of that line had governed it, when it was finally absorbed by the Mahomedans The kings of Benarcs, who bore the patronymic of Pal, and professed the Boodhist religion, attained great power, and one of them is said to have extended his conquests to Onssa The family, however, became extinct before the invasion of Mahomed Ghory, when the king of Bengal seized Gour and Behar, and the king of Cunoui, the western districts of Benares, which greatly increased his power and his arrogance In the west, the kingdom of Guzerat was governed by the family of Bhagilas, who were generally found in alliance with the kingdom of Cunous Amere, then a powerful monarchy, was governed by the Agmere, then a powertal monarchy, was governed by the Cholnen, and always said with the overerigns of Delh, of the Turr dynasty The last king of this line having no son adopted his grandson Prithiraj, the offspring of his daughter, who was married to the king of tymere The king of Cunouj refused to acknowledge the superiority which had been con ecded to the kings of Delhi, and they were engaged in in cossent warfare. Thus, at the period when Valuemed Ghora was a reparate to externate the Hindoo power in the north of

Index, its praces instead of combining against the common for, were engaged in mutual hostilities, or alienated from each other ly fam ly realousies Hindostan was divided into two irreconcilable parties—the one comprising Guzerat and Connous the other Della, the Chohan of Amere, and the Hindoo raja of Chittore It is asserted by some native authors that Teychunder, the king of Cunou; impelled by hatred of the young king of Delhi, invited Mahomed Ghory to invade India, but the evidence of this act of treason is doubt ful, and the Mahomedan prince required no prompting to an enterrace of such large promise. But it is certain that it o king of Cunous assumed the arrogant title of lord paramount of India and resolved to support his pretensions by celebrating the magnificent sacrifice of the horse The otler rances of the north hastened to pay their homage to him, but Prithiraj, the king of Delhi supported by the raja of Chittore, refused the king of some superiority put forward by his rival. In this gorgeous coremon, it is required that every office, however menial, shall be performed by royal hands. As the king of Delhi refused to appear, an offigy of gold was made to supply his place, and planted at the entrance of the hall, to represent him in the capacity of the porter In such acts of folly were the Hindoo princes in the north wasting their time and their energies, while the Mahomedan was thundering at their door

12

On the threshold of the great revolution produced by this invasion we pause for a moment to record the civil virtues of Bhoje Raja the last of the really great Hindoo sovereigns of Hindostan. He was of the race of the Prumuras who still continued to reign, though with diminished splendour, at Oojcan and at Dhar. Scated on the throne of Vikrumaalityu, the determined to revive the literary glory of his court and to redder his own reign illustrious by the encouragement of literature. While the silly king of Cuncuj was engaged in celebrating the sacrifice of the horse, and the princes of the north were lastening to that imperial sovereign who had the wish as well as the power to patroniso

letters

43

to escape across the Indus with the wreck of his army Though he appeared outwardly to forget his disgrace, it was, silently preying on his mind, and he stated in one of his letters that he "newher slumbered at ease, nor waked but in sorrow and anxiety"

Having in the course of two years recruited his army with Tartars, Turks, and Afghans, he moved again over the Indus, and entered Himdostan 'A hundred and fifty chiefs rallied around the king of Delhi who was enabled, on the lowest calculation, to bring 300,000 horse, 3,000 elephants, and a vast body of infantry into the field The allied sovereigns, inflated with an idea of their superiority, sent Mahomed a lofty message granting him their permission to retire without mury. He replied. with great apparent humbty, that he was merely his brother's heutenant, to whom he would refer their message Hindoos misinterpreted this answer to denote weal ness, and spent the night in revelry The Caggar flowed between the aimies Mahomed clossed his army during the night, and fell upon the Hindoos before they had recovered from their debauch But in spite of the confusion which ensued, so vast was their host that they still had time to fall into their ranks. and Mahomed, reduced again to difficulty, sounded a retreat The Hindoos were, as he expected, thrown into disorder in the pursuit, when he charged them with his reserve, and as the historian observes, "this producious army once slinken, like a great building tottered to its fall, and was lost in its own runs ' The gallant raja of Chittore, Somarsi, fell nobly fighting at the head of his Raipoots, and the king of Delhi, who was taken prisoner, was butchered in cold blood Mahomed then proceeded against Ajmere, and captured the town, and put several thousands of the inhabitants to the franza

1 regress of Mahomed returned to Ghuzni laden with plunder, heorab, 1194, and Kootub ood-deen, a slave who had gained his confidence by the display of great tale its both as a general and as a statesmen, was left an charge of his conquests He followed out his master's plans, by the capture of Mccrut and Coel, and eventually of Delhi which was now, for the first time, made the seat of the Mahomedan government of India The kings of Cunous and Guzerat, who had looked on with malicious delight while the Michomedan smote down their Hindoo opponents, had no long respite themselves, Mahomed returned the next year to India with a still larger force, and a battle was fought at a place between Chundwar and Etawih, in which Jev chunder, the king of Cunous was totally defeated, and perished, and the oldest Hindoo monarchy in the north was finally subverted. This reverse indified the whole tribe of the Rathores to emigrate in a body to Raipoo tana where they established the Lingdom of Marwar or Joudhpore, which still continues to exist Mahomed then advanced against Benares, which was captured with ease, and demolished 1,000 temples *And thus, in the short space of four years, was the Hindoo power in Hindostan completely and irrevocably extinguished Kootub lost no time in despatching one of his

Conquest of slaves, Bukhtiyar Ghilpe, who had risen to com Behar and Bengal, 1°03 mand by his native genius, to conquer Behar The capital was sacked and the country subdued, and the army returned within two years to Dellu, bending beneath the weight of its plunder An attempt was soon after made to supplant Bukhtiyar in his master's favour, but it was defeated by the prowess he exhibited in single combat with a lion, which his enemics at court had forced on him This event established him still more firmly in the confidence of Kootub. who sent him in 1203 to reduce Bengal That kingdom had for a long period been under the government of a dynasty of Nidyus, of the medical caste, who established an era which continued in vogue in the province till it was abolished by Akbar, two centuries and a half ago. The throne was then filled by Lucksman Sen, who had been placed on it in his infancy, and had now attained the age of eighty His long reign was distinguished by his liberality, elemency and prince His court was usually hell at Nudden, though he ecasionally resided at Gont, or Lucknoutee On the approach of the Mahanda'ns, he was advised by his trahams, in accordance as they sud, with the instructions of their react. books, to retire to some remote province. He refused to follow their advice, but he made no preparation for the emergency, and allowed Jumself to be surprised at a meal by · Bukhtiyar, who rushed into his palace with a handful of troops The king contrived to escape through a back gate to his boats, and did not pause until he had reached Jugunnath. m Orissa . It is worthy of remark, that while the king of Della offered an honourable resistance to the Mahomedans, and the king of Cunous fell bravely defending his liberty, and Cluttore made the most heroic struggle, Bengal fell without even an effort for its independence The whole kingdom was conquered within a single year, and submitted patiently to the rule of the Mahomedan for five centuries and a half, till he was supplanted by the Christian Bukhtiyar delivered up the city of Nuddea to plunder, and then proceeded to Gour. which offered no defence The Hindoo temples were demolished, and Mahomedan mosques, palaces, and caravanseras built with the materials After the conquest of Bengal Bukhtivar marched with a large army to Bootan and Assam. but was signally defeated by those brave highlanders and driven back to Bengal, where he died of chagring three years after be had entered the province

During these transactions, Mahomed was en gaged in ambitious expeditions in the west. The empire of the Seljuks having fallen to pieces, he was anxions t come in for a share of it. Of the new Lingdoms which had arisen upon its runs, that of Khansin, on the eastern shore of the Caspian Sea, had attained great power under Takash, against whom Mallomed nowled his forces, but ex perienced a signal defeat, and was obliged to purchase a retreat by a heavy ransom. On his return to his own doπ٦ minions, he resolved to punish the Gukkers for their incessant rebellions, and not only brought them under subjection, of the Prophet, but on his way back to Ghuzni, he was assassinated by two of the tribe as he was reposing in his tent, in the year 1206 He governed the kingdom in his brother's name for forty five years, and was king in his own right for only three In the course of ten years, he completely demolished the Hindoo power from the banks of the Sutlege to the bay of Bengal, and at the period of his death, the vl ole of Hindostan, with the exception of Malwa, was under a settled and permanent Mahomedan government. The treasure he left, the fruit of nine expeditions to India, is stated at a sum which appears incredible, particularly when it is said to have included five mains of diamonds

Mahomed, who was childless was in the habit deen 176. of training up the most promising of his slaves, and rai ing them according to their ment, to posts of dignity and power His nephew, Mahmood, who was in possession of Ghore, was indeed proclaimed king throughout all the provinces on both sides the Indus, but the kingdom was soon broken up into separate states. Of the slaves of the deceased monarch. Eldoze, the governor of Ghuzm, seized on Cabul and Candahar, while Kootub retained the sovereignty of Hindos tan Eldoze, who affected still to consider India a dependency of Ghuzni marched arrainst him, but was defeated at Labore. Knotub followed up the victory and recovered Ghuzni, where be assumed the grown, but was soon after expelled by his rival, and driven back to India, with which, after this reverse, . he determined to remain content. The establishment of the Mahomedan empire in India 14, therefore, considered to date from this event, in the year, 1200. Kootub was the first of those Turki slaves who rose to specifying and furnished a succession of rulers to India. Meanwhile, Takveh the great monarch of Khanem having overrun Pers a, marched against Eldoze and extinguished his brief reign, as well as that of

48

Mahmood of Ghore, and annexed all the provinces west of the Indus to his possessions. Kootub did not enjoy his Indian sovereignty more than four years, when he was succeeded by his son, Aram, who was displaced within a twelvementh by Altumsh, the slave and the son-in-law of Kootub, in 1211. He justified the preference of his master during a long icign of twenty-five years.

It was in the tenth year of his reign that Jelalood-deen, the king of Kharism, was driven to seck shelter in India by the irruption of Jenghis Khan, the greatest conqueror of that age, and the original founder of Mogul greatness. The Moguls were a tribe of Tartars, who roamed with their flocks and herds on the northern side of the great wall of China, without any fixed abode. When their numbers increased beyond the means of subsistence they poured down on the fertile provinces of the south. The father of Jenglis Khan presided over thirteen of these nomadic tribes, whose number did not exceed 40,000. At the age of forty, Jenghia Khan had established his power over all the Tartar tribes, and at a general convention held about the year 1210, was acknowleged the great Khan of the Moguls by the shepherd hordes from the wall of China to the Volga. He had received no education, and was unable either to read or write; but a natural genius for conquest, and the fiery valour and insatiable cupidity of his followers, raised him to the summit of human power. The Moguls burst with appetuosity on China, overleaped the barriers which the Chinese monarchs had erected to exclude them; and after storming minety cities compelled the emperor to cede the northern provinces to them and retire to the south of the Yellow river. In the west, the progress of Jenghis Khan brought him into collision with Mahomed. . the great sultan, of Kharism, who held in contempt the shepherd soldiers of Tartary, with no wealth but their flocks and their swords—and no cities but their tents. He put three of Jengha Khan's ambassadors to death, and refused all redress, and the Mogul poured down on his dominions

n]

with an army of 700,000 men. Mahoned met him with 400,000 troops, but was defeated and obliged to fly, leaving, it is said, 160,000 of them dead on the field. Mahomed then distributed his soldiers among his various dies in the hope of impoding the career of the enemy, but the cities fell to him ratidly, and the magnificent monarch of Kharism, recently the most powerful in Asia, died without an attendant in a barren island of the Caspian Sea From that sea to the Indus, more than 1,000 miles in extent, the whole country was laid waste with fire and sword by these ruthless larbarins It was the greatest calamity which had befallen the human race since the deluce and five centuries have barely been sufficient to repair that desolation. The son of Mahomed the heroic Jelal ood deen, continued to fight the Moguls at every stage. but nothing could arrest their piogress. He encountered them for the last time on the banks of the Indus, when his whole army peri hed, and he sprung with his horse into the stream, attended by only a few followers, and sought an asylum from Altumsh, but that prince was too prudent to provoke the vengeance of the man who hal made himself the scource of Asia, and Jolal ood deen was obliged to seek some other refuge After a variety of adventures he was killed about ten years after in Mesopotamia. The victorious and destructive career of the Moguls does not belong to the history of Indea, the soil of which they did not then invade But Jenetus Khan effected a complete revolution in the policy and destines of Central Asia, and gave a predominant influence to the Moguls who, after the lapse of three centuries, were led per ss the Indus, under the auspices of Baber, and eventually established on the throne of India

The emperor Altumsh was employed for several years in subduing his own insubduint to receive, and subjugating those provinces of flind strin which still muntained some show of independence. It reduced the fortress of Pintambore in Rappotans, car tured Gwalior and Mandoo, and then proceeded against Opien, it c capital of Malwa, one of the sacred cities of the Hindoos, where he destroyed the magnificent temple of Mulia Kal, erected 1,200 years before by Vil rumidityu, sending the images to Dulu to be brolen up at the entrance of the great mosque He died in 1,236, and was succeeded by his son, but he was denosed for his vices within six months by the nobles, who inised his sister Sultana Reza to the throne . This celebrated princess, endowed ac cording to the historian with every royal virtue, governed the empire for a time with the greatest ability and success She appeared daily on the throne in the habit of a sultan, gave audience to all comers, and set herself vigorously to the revision of the laws, and the reformation of abuses. but she expited to the highest dignity in the empire an Abyssinian slave to whom she had become partial, and her justons nobles took up aims against her She fought them in two severe lattles but was defeated captured, and put to death, severe curies but was accented captured, and put to death, after a br of reign of three years and a lalf. The two suc ceeding reigns occupied only six years whon Nazir ood deen, Mazhrood deea, a grandson of Altumah mounted the throne Bulbun, a Turki slave, and the son in law of Altumsh was appointed his chief minister, and proved to be one of the ablest statesman of his time. Under his admin stration the government was strengthened by the more complete tool the Government was strengthened by the inter compression of the Hindoo chiefs, and his nephew, Shere Khru, who was charged with the defence of the Indus against the Moguls succeeded likewise in re-annexing the province of Ghuzni to the throne of Dolhi Bulbun was for a time supplanted in his office of vizier 13 an unworthy favourite of the emperor but the disasters which followed his dism sal, and, the remonstrances of the nobles constrained his master to reinstate him In the tenth year of this reign an embassy arrived from Hulakoo, the grandson of Jenghis Khan, bufore whom Asia trembled and it was resolved to make every exertion to give his envoy the most honourable receiption. The vizier himself went out to meet 1 in with 50,000 horse and 200,000 infantry, 2,000 war elephants, and 3,000 car ringes of fireworks. By this noble escort he was conducted to the durbar of the emperor, around whose throne stood twenty five of the princes who had been cycled from their hereditary seats by the Moguls, and obtained an asylum at Dulin Nazir ood deen's private life was that of a heimit, his personal expenses were defrayed from the sale of the books which he transcribed, his fare which was of the impliest character, was prepared by his wife who was his sole female companion. He died without leving any son, and was succeeded by his numister Bulbun.

This prince was equally renowned for lus

Bulbun, I 66 justice and generosity and for the vigour of his administration though his cruelty on certain occasions has induced some of the historians to represent him as a monster He continued the hospitality which his predecessor had shown to the dethroned princes of Tartary, Transoxina Khorasan, Persia, Irak, and other provinces placed the royal palaces at their disposal and granted them the most liberal allowances These princes were accompanied by the accomplished scholars who had been assembled around them and the court of Bulbun was thus considered the most polite and magnificent in As a He banished all usurers, players and Luffoons from its precincte and set an example of the severest fragality and temperance At the same time he endeavoured to curb the insolence of the royal slaves who had begun to arrogate great power, but he made it a rule to give no promotion to any Hiudoo He, was advised to reconquer Malwa and Guzerat which had revolted but wisely replied that the por *tentous cloud of Moguls ever hanging over his northern frontier, demanded his undivided attention. He resolved however, to inflict a severe retribution on I grul Klan, the viceroy of the opulent province of Bengrl who lad omitted to rem t the plunder recently acquired from a rebel el icf, and on hearing of his master sillness, had raised the red umbrilla, an I assumed the title of king. Two armies were sent in succession agrars' lin and defeated and Bulbun took the fell in person.

The refractory governor fled to Orissa, and was pursued by the imperial troops Mullik, one of the emperor's generals, advanced to the camp of the enemy with only forty followers, and rushing into Togrul Khan's tent shouted "Victory to Ling Bulbun," cutting down all who opposed The vicercy, imagining that the whole of the imperial army was upon him, took to flight, and his army was entirely dispersed Bulbun made an ill use of his victory, by putting to death every member of the rebel's family, even to the women and children During these transactions the Moguls again burst on Hindostan, and Mahomed, the accomplished son of the emperor, who had collected around him the men most celebrated in Asia for learning and genius, marched to oppose The Moguls dispersed after a long and sanguinary action Maliomed pursued them with imprudent haste and on his return was unexpectedly enveloped by a body of their cavalry, superior in number to his own followers, and fell in

With him perished the hopes of the dynasty The army and the empire was equally filled with lamentation, for he was the idol of both, and his father, then in his eightfuth year, soon after died of a broken heart

π٦

son the most salutary advice, returned to his own government But the youth again abandoned himself to indulgence on his return to the capital, and it terminated in palsy. Then came a scramble for power between the Tartar mercenaries around the throne, and the Afghan mountaineers of Ghuzui and Ghore denominated the Ghlijies The Tartars were cut to pieces Kei kobrd was killed in his bed, and the Ghlijie chief, Feroze mounted the throne at the age of seventy, taking the title of Jell ood deen. Thus closed the dynasty which has been denominated that of the slaves, which commenced with the slave Kootub, in 1206, and terminated in 1258. within three years of the death of the slave Bulbun

The period of thirty three years, during which the Ghilpe family occupied the throne of Delhi, was rendered memorable in the history of India, by the subjugation of the Decean to the Malaneadan arms - Feroze, on mounting the thione, jut to death the infant son of the late king whose cause had been espoused by the opposite faction, but this was the only act of cruelty during his reign, which was, on the contrary, marked by a very impolitic lenity, which seemed to multiply crame, and to weaken the authority of government. In the fifth year of his reign, in the year 1294, government In the fifth year of his reign, in the year 1294, Expetions a century after the battle of Thunesur, which has become 1294 give the final blow to Hundoo power in Hundoo tan, his nephew, Alla cod deen, a man of great energy and violent ambition, but without a consecue, carried his arms across the Arludda and paved the way for the conjuest of the Deccan—He had been appointed to the government of Oude and Korth, and was successful in subduing some refractor, chieftuns in Bundlecund and Malwa which led numerony emericans in numeround and Malwa which led him to project a mirruding expedition to the south. He collected an army of 8 000 men, and swept across the Nerbudda with a degree of rajuity, which confounded the native princes, and suddenly presented himself before Deogur, the Tagara of the It man writers, the Dowlutabad of modern bistory. The rays, being in the security of perfect peace, IL.

throne, and endeavoured to divert the reople from the edouse crime to which he owed his elevation, by the exhibition of grimes and a musements. He was unable to read or write when he became king, but applied to letters with such assiduity, as to become a good Persian scholar, after which, he surrounded himself with learned men, and took great pleasure in their society. His government was stem and inflexible, but admirably suited to the exigencies of the time. The insurrections which broke out in various provinces immediately on his accession, were quelled by his promptitude and energy, and his reign, which was prolonged to twenty-one years, was constantly occupied in efforts to refer the Moguls in the north, and to subjugate the Hindoos in the conth Two years after he had mounted the throne, he Comment of dispatched an army to Guzerat, where the raja had resumed his independence. The country had recovered from the effect of premous invasions, and was again smiling with prosperity, but this new torrent of destruction swept away every vestice of improvement, and the Hindoo power sunk to rise no more The magnificent city of Puttun, with its marble edifices, built from the quarries of Aimere, was completely demolished The images of its opulent shrines were destroyed and a Mahomedan mosque erected in front of the principal temple Among the prizes of this campuign the historians particularly note Kowla Devee the wife of the king, a woman of unrivalled beauty, who was transferred to Alla ood deen's seragito, and Kafoor, a handsome slave, who rose to distinction at Court, and eventually became the scourge of the Deccan The expedition to Guzerat was no sooner completed, than the attention of the emperor was distracted by another Mogal invasion Two han-M was fore. dred thousand horsenen, under Kutluch Khan crossed the linder and marched down upon Delhi. The wretched inhabitants were driven before them like sheep into the city, and faming began to stare that vast multitude

m the face The experor marched out at the head of his troops, and the native instorian affirms, that on no former occasion had so great a multitude of human beings been collected together in India in one place. The Indian troops won the day, chiefly through the exertions of Zuffer Khan, the most distinguished of the emperor's generals. But in the pursuit of the enemy, he was carried away by his impetuosity, the emperor's brother who was jerlous of his increasing power withheld all succour from him, and he was cut to pieces after having performed produges of valour. His ungenerous master who dreaded his genius, did not hesitate to say, that his death was as fortunate a circumstance as the defeat of the Moguls.

In the year 1803, Alla ood deen attacked the Chittore, 1303. fortress of Chittore, the sent of the Ramoot family, which now reigns at Oodypore The siege was pushed with great vigour, and when all further defence appeared hor eless a large functal pile was kindled in the fort, into which the queen, Pudmance, a woman of exquisite beauty, and the females of the noblest families, threw themselves After this fearful sacrifice, the gates were thrown open, and the rula, with his faithful followers, rushed on the weapons of the enemy, and obtained the death they sought. The emixror destroyed all the temples and palaces which had adorned the city, but spared the residence of the king and queen. From these transactions he was recalled by another invasion of the Mogul-, who extended their ravages up to the gates of Delhi, and retired in consequence, it was said, of a panic created among them Ly the prayers of a saint These invasions were . renewed in 1305 and 1306, but the Moguls were defeated in both expeditions To make an example of them the emperor ordered the heads of all the male prisoners to be struck ifi, an l a pillar to be constructed of themat Dell i, and the women and children to be sold into slavery. After this event, there was but one farther irruption of these tribes during the reign.

56

Jr.] introden of the The first expedition to the Decean in this reign in 1303 was interrupted by the invasion of the Moguls, and the generals who were left to conduct it, when the emperor was recalled, were unsuccessful. Another army was as embled in 1306, under the command of Kafoor, once the slave, but now the favourite general of his master, and sent to chastise the run of Deogur, who had neglected to pay up his tribute. It was in this expedition that Kafoor subdued the Mahrattas whose name now appears for the first time in history Ram deva, the king of Deogur, made his sulmission, and proceeded to Delhi to wait on the emperor, when he was restored to power Kafoor, likewise, recovered Down D von the daughter whom the empress had borne to her former husband, and who had inherited all her mother's beauty. After a long pursuit she was overtaken near the caves of Ellora-and this is the earliest notice of them-and on her arrival at Delhi became the bude of the emperor a son, at so early a period do we find intermarriages between the Hindoos and the Mahomedans in expedition sent from Bengal along the coast to Warungole, which was for marly two centuries the capital of Telingram, having fuled, Kafoor was sent against it in 1309 He ravaged the northern trovinces, ob ained a great victory, and took the fort after a so go of some months. The rap was condemned to pay tribute and Kafoor returned to Dellin proceeded farther down on the western or Malahar coast: but he overran the whole of the eastern provinces on the Coremandel coast, to the extreme limit of the Peninsula; and at Ramisseram, opposite Ceylon, erected a mosque, as a memorial of his victories. He returned to Delhi, in 1311, laden with the plunder of the Deccan; the value of which has been calculated by "sober" historians at 100 crores of rupees. The emperor made a liberal distribution of this wealth, but his generosity was forgotten in the barbarous massacre of 15,000 of the converted Moguls who had manifested a disposition to revolt on being capticously dismissed from his service. In the year 1812, Kafoor was again sent into the Deccan to coerce the son of Ram-deva, the rais of Deogur, who had succeeded his father, and "withdrawn his neck from the voke of obedience." He put the rais to death, annexed his kingdom to the throne of Delhi, and carried his arms over the whole of the Carnata and Mahratta territories.

CHAP.

Towards the latter period of his reign Alla-ood-Fatinction of deen gave himself up to indulgence, which enthe Chillie dynasty, 12-1 feebled both his mind and his body; but the victor which he had infused into the covernment still continued to animate it. At length his infatuated attachment to Kafoor, whose baseness was equal to his talents, created general discontent. It was at the instigation of this wretch that he impresented his queen, and his two elder sons. Rebelhons broke out in rapid succession in the countries he had conquered. Hamir, the renowned Raincot chieftain, recovered Cluttore; the con-in-law of Ram-deva raised a revolt in the Decean: Guzerat was for a time in a state of insurrection, and the emperor sunk into the grave amidst these dark clouds, not without the suspicion of poison. It was during his reign that the Mahomedan arms were first carried to Cape Comorin, and the authority of the emperor for a time predominated through the length of India; but the more southern conquests were transient. Though he was often capricious, and sometimes cruck his rule was energetic and beneficial, the incessant wars of the Hindoo princes with each other were sutpressed by his sovereignty, and a general feeling of security gave prosperity and wealth to the country, and magnificent buildings rose in every direction Alla-ood deen had thoughts at one time of setting up for a prophet, but he gave up the project, and contented himself with assuming the title of a second Alexander on his coms Kafoor produced a pretended will of his patron, appointing his youngest son his successor, and himself regent Then began the usual destruction of the royal family in the struggle for power Cafoor put out the eyes of the two eldest sons The officers of the court in a few days caused Cafoor lumself to be assassinated, and placed the third son, Mobarik, on the throne, who immediately but to death the instruments of his elevation, and extinguished the sight of his youngest brother. On the other hand he released 17,000 prisoners, restored lands which had been unjustly conficated, and repealed oppressive taxes He put himself at the head of his army, and by an act of vigour reduced Guzerat, and captured the insurgent son in law of Ram deva, whom he caused to be flaved alive But on his return to the capital he gave himself up to the most degrading debaucheries, while his favourite Khusro, a converted Hindoo, was sent to rayage the maritime province of Malabar which Kafoor had left untouched, though by some the expedition is supposed to have extended only to the province of Coorg Khusro returned to Delhi with abundance of treasure, assassinated his master, and usurped the throne To secure the possession of it, he proceeded to put every surviving member of the royal family to death, but Ghazee Toghluk, the governor of the Punnb, soon after marched on Della, with the veteran troops of the frontier province, disciplined by constant confacts with the Moguls, and put an end to the reign and his of the mon terno sooner retired from the edifice than it fell and crushed the father to death.

Tashumed Jonah Khan ascended the throne in 1325, and Tashum, 1225 assumed the title of Mahomeo Toghluk. This prince, whose follies brought on the dismemberment of the empire, was a compound of the most contradictory qualities He was the most accomplished prince of his day, skilled in He was the most accomplished prace of his day, skilled in every science, and learned even in the philosophy of the Greek schools, a liberal patron of learning, temperate, and even astere in his private life, and distinguished in the field by his courage and military tulents. But all these noble qualities were neutralized by such perversity of disposition, and such paroxysms of tyrandy, as made him the object of universal execution. It was the intoxication of absolute power which meited him to acts which none but a madman would have thought of "So little," says the native historian, "did he besitate to shed the blood of God's creatures. run, "dul he hesitate to shed the blood of God's creatures, that when he took vengennee, it seemed as if he wished to exterminate the human family". The very first act of his regin was an enigma. The Moguls invided the Ponjab, under one of their most celebrated generals, and the emperor lought them off with a large subsidy, though he could not fail to perceive that this display of weshness woull inevitably bring them Luck with a keener appetite for plunder. He then assembled a large army for the conquest of Persa, but, after consuming his recoveres, it was broken in for wait of pay, and became the terror of his own subjects in ever direction. Tinding his treasury exhausted by his extravagant gehemes, he determined to replement the ylevying centrications on the empire of Claim. A fody of 100 000 men was recordingly sent across the snowy ringe, but it was stateled tions on the empire of Clina. A fooly of 100 000 men was accordingly sent across the snowr ringe, but it was attacked by a superior force on reaching the confines of that empire, and obliged to reture. Harassed in their retreat by the Chinese troops, and the exasperated mountaineers, and worm out by fattice and privation, few of the unfortunate troops returned to tell the tale of their disgrace, and these who survived the sword and famine were butchered by their own master Having heard that the Chinese were in the habit of using a paper currency, he determined to adopt this mode of filling his coffers, only substituting copper tolens for paper. The mode ency of the treasury depreciated the value of the tokens, and foreign merchants refused to touch them The mercantile transactions of the empire were thrown into confusion, and the universal misery and discontent which the measure entuled, constrained him to withdraw the tokens, but not before thousands had been runed by them So exorbitant were his exactions, that the husbandmen sought refuge in the woods, and were driven to robbery for a sub-sistence The towns were deserted, and the inhabitants goaded into resistance by despair. The enraged emperor ordered out his army as if for a royal hunt, surrounded a large circle of territory, and drove the wretched people into the centre, where they were slaughtered like wild beasts On a subsequent occasion, he ordered a general massacre of the inhabitants of Cunous In the year 1338 he took the field in person

Comment feel and the comment of the

PEVOLT OF THE 1 ROVINCES

mr]

calendar

much the calumities of his subjects, he caused a decryed tooth, which had been extracted, to be interred at Beer, and erected a magnificent mausoleum over it. At length he conceived the notion that the disasters of his reign prose from the fact of his not hwing received investiture from the Calphi, the successor of Mahomed A splendid embassy was accordingly sent to Bagdad, and on its return with the firman.

he ordered the names of all his predecessors who had not received the same honour, to be struck out of the royal avenge the wanton slaughter of seventy of their nobles The emperor immediately proceeded against them, gave up the cities of Surat and Cumbay to plunder, and ravaged the whole province as if it had been an enemy's country Guzerat Moguls obtained an asylum in the Deccan, where they were joined by all whom the atrocities of Mahomed had exasperated and, having taken possession of Dowlutabad, proclaimed Ismael Khan, an Afglan, Ling. The emperor marched against them with great promptitude, inflicted a signal defeat on them, and shut them in that fortress But, while engaged in besieging it, he was called away by a frish conspi acy in Guzerat The Moguls defeated his son in law, who had been left in command and in conjunction with the governor of Malwa, who had likewise revolted from his master, succeeded in establishing a new monarchy in the Deccan which is known in listory as the Balminy kingdom In 1351, Mahomed proceeded against the prince of Tatta, in Sinde, who had given an asylum to the Guzerat insurgents He halted within a few miles of that city to celebrate the Mohurrum, and surfeited himself with fish, which brought on a fever of which he died in 1351 At the time of Mahomed 1351 his death all the Mahomedan possessions in the Deccan, as well as the province of Bengal, had been alienated from the throne of Delhi Mahamed was succeeded by his nephew Peroze

Mahomed was succeeded by his nephew Teroze 1231—1238 Toghilah, who endeavoures to receiver Bengal, but seeing no chance of success, acknowledged the independence of Huses, who had assumed the government, and wisely fixed the boundaries of the langdom. Soon after, he consented to receive an envoy from the Bahmmy king of the Deccan, and thus admitted the fact of his sovereignty. The reign of Feroze though by no means brill ant was marked by a wise administration. He discouraged luxury by his own example, reyeaded vexations imposts, limited the number of capital punshments, and abolished tortine and mutilation. But the erection of pulle works was his ruling passon, ın J 65 FOUR INDEPTNDENT KINGDOMS and the historians of his day enumerate with exultation among the monuments which he left, fifty dams across rivers to promote arrigation, forty mosques, tharty colleges, twenty palaces, tharty reservoirs, five mansolums, a hundred caravanseras, a hundred hospitals, a hundred public baths, a hundred and fifty bridges, and two hundred towns greatest achievement of his reign, however, was the canal from the source of the Ganges to the Sutlege, which still bears his name, and places him among the most renowned benefactors of mankind After a 1cign of thirty four years, he resigned the throne to his son, usually called Mahomed Toghluk the second, who gave himself up to indulgence, and was deposed by the nobles when Feroze was constrained to resume the imperial power. But he was now in the ninetieth year of his age, and in 1358 transferred the sceptre to his grandson, Gheras During the next ten years, the throne was occupied by no fewer than four princes The court was filled with plots, two kings resided within the circuit of the capital, for three years, and waged incessant war with each other Hindostan was thrown into a state of complete anarchy, and four independent kingdoms were carved out of the dominions of Della, leaving nothing to that august throne but the districts unmediately around at suspected of treachery Hs independence may be said to date from the day of his accession to the government, as there was no power at Bella to enforce his obschence. It was about the year 1398 that Nazir Khan, the viceroy of Candesh, which consists of the lower valley of the Tapter, threw off his allegrance, and espoused a drughter of the new lang of Guzerat, to which more powerful state his little principality was generally considered subordinate. Still nearer the capital, Khojah Jehan, the vizier of Mahomed Toghik the third, and his ewise viceroy of Joinpore, availed himself of the troubles of the times to assume the royal umbrell. The empire of Della, thus despoiled of its fairest provinces, fell an easy trey to the invider, who was now approaching it,—the most farce one of any of those who have laid waste the plans of Hindostan.

The Ameer Timur, or Tamerlane, was born Timur 1399 within forty miles of Samarcand, and came of a Turki family, which had long been in the service of the descendants of Jenglus Khan His lot was cast at a period in human affairs when the decay of vigour in the established Lingdoms presented the fairest opportunity for the foundation of a new empire by any daring adventurer Timur was possessed of the spirit suited to such an enterprise, and, having been raised at the age of thirty four, to the throne of Samarcand by the general voice of his countrymen, in the course of a few years prostrated every throne that stood in the way of his progress, and became at once the scourge of Asia and the terror of Europe Animated by a stupendous ambition, he led the hordes of Tartary to the conquest of Persia Khorasan and Transoxiana, and subjugated the whole of Mesopotamia and Georgia and a portion of Russia and Siberia. Having made himself master of the whole of Central Asia he despatched his grand on, Peer Mahome! with a powerful army to invade India The youth, however, encountered more opposition than was expected, and Timur found it necessary to advance to his support. He arrived on the banks of the Indes on the 12th of September, 1398, with nancty-two squadrons of horse, and crossed it at Attoch, where Alexander the Great had crossed it perfore him. His grandson soon after joined his camp, and the two armics marched to Bhutnere, but though the town was surrendered on terms, it was burnt to the ground, and the inhabitants were put to the sword. The illages and towns were deserted as he advanced, but a considerable number of prisoners necessarily remained in his bands, and as they were found greatly to encumber his march, he ordered them all to be masseared in cold blood, to the number of 100,000. A buttle was soon after fought under the walls of Delhi, between the veterans of Timur and the efferminate soldiers of the empire, with the result which might have been expected. The empirer was defeated and fled to Guzerat, and Timur

they extended only twelve miles from the city in one direction, and secreely a mile in the other Beloli Lodi, thinking the pear was now ripe, marched down upon Belin The king resigned the throne to him without a sigh, and retired on a pension to Budaon where he passed twenty eight years of his life in cultivating his gardens. With him, in 1450, ended the house of the Synds

Beloh was an Afghan of the tribe of Lodi now known as the Lohance, which is engaged Peloti Lodi chiefly in the conveyance of merchandise between Hindostan and Perin His grandfather, a wealthy trader repaired to the court of Feroze Toghluk, the first great patron of the Afglians where he acquired sufficient interest to obtain the government of Mooltan, to which was subsequently added that of the Punish This rich inheritance eventually came to Boloh, though not without great opposition on the part of his relatives His success was chiefly owing to the talents of Humced, the vizier of his predecessor, whom he subsequently banished from his court, on the plea that he was becoming too powerful for a subject. The ambitious Belok was not likely to remain content with the humble limits to which the imperial territory had been reduced and the great object of his reign was to extend his authority, and more particularly to re unnex the kingdom of Jounnors to the crown, which, since its c-tallishment, had become, in every respect, the rival of Delhi Beloli had not been two years on the throne before he made an inroad into it, but was vigorously repulsed.
The structle between the two kingdoms was prolonged with various successes for twenty eight years, during which period Delhi was twice besieged by the armies of Jounpore Hos Dum was twice besigged by the armies of Jounpore Hos-thities were occasionally suspended by a truce but it only afforded the combatants the opportunity of recruiting their strength for fresh conflicts. It is distressing to a flect on the desolation entuiled on these districts, which form the garden of Hindostun, and the misery inflicted on the wretched in habitants, by the interneeine wars of these two royal houses.

in comparison with which even the oppression of the worst of governments must appear light Happily for the interests of humanity, the conflict was brought to a close in 1476, when the "King of the Pret," as he was styled, fled to Bengal and the kingdom of Jounpore was absorbed in the territory of Della The dynasty existed for eighty years, of which period one half was comprised in the reign of Ibrahim, one of the most illustrious princes in the history of Hindostan Under his beneficent administration, the prosperity of the country reached its summit Learned men from all parts of India were invited to the court, which was universally acl nowledged to be the most polished and elegant in India of Jounpore was adorned with superb and massive structures, the remains of which to this day testify the magnificence of the dynasty Beloh survived this protracted warfare ten years, and died in 1488, after a reign of thirty eight years, during which he succeeded in extending the territory of the crown from the Jumpa to the Himalavu, and from the Indus to Benares Beloli, as if he had determined to render family

70

Secunder and to num Lott, feuds mevitable, divided his territories among his 1488-15 6. sons, but Secunder to whom he had bequeathed the largest share, together with the throne, lost no time in dispossessing his brothers His prosperous icign of twentyeight years was marked by the recovery of Behar Though just and equitable in his administration 1c followed the rule rather tlan the exception of the Mahomedan conquerors of India with regard to the treatment of the Hindoos He lost no opportunity of manifesting his hatred of them, and in every quarter demolished their temples and crected mosques with the materials In the holy city of Muttra he planted a mosque in froit of the stairs leading to the sacred stream, and at length forbade the devotees to bathe in it and the barbers to shave the pilgrims In the year 1517, he was suc ceeded by Ibrahim, the third and last of his line, who alienated the nobles by his suspicious tempor and his haughty

m 1 71 CANDESH, MALWA, GUZERAT, MEWAR. demeanour His reign was a constant struggle with rebel hon Behar revolted under its governor, who is said to have brought a body of 100,000 men into the field, and repeatedly definted the armies of the emperor. A prince of his own family took possession of the eastern districts and endeay pared to revive the kingdom of Jounpore Dowlet Khan. the governor of the Punish, the vicerous of which had frequently imposed their own orders on the emperor of Dellu. and more than once usurped the throne itself, now entered into negotiations with Sultan Baber for the invasion of Hin distan . Even the emperor's own brother, Alla ood deen. joined that prince at Cabul, and encouraged him in his designs on Hindostan The success which attended his invesion will be the subject of a future chapter Having thus reached the period when the throne of Delhi was transferred to the fifth and last Mahomedan dynasty, we turn to the progress of events in the Deccan in Malwa, and in Guzerat, from the period when those provinces were separated from the empire that his subjects were about to elect another sovereign, and take the field Mozuffer was succeeded in 1412 ly his grand son, Ahmed Shah, whose long reign of thirty years, tas passed in constant hostilities either with Malwa or Mew'r His name survives in the new capital Ahmedabad, which he erected on the banks of the Saburmuttee, and adorned with magnificent mosques, catavansers and pulsces, in such profusion, that the Mahomidan historians described it as the handsomest city in the world He was a ze ilous Mahomedan, and a great destroyer of Hindoo temples and images He was succeeded in 1413 by his son, Mahomed Shah, surnamed by his subjects, the merciful,' and by his enemies, the "werl ' Sultan Hoshung the turbulent king of Malwa, died in 1432 and bequesthed the kingdom to his son, who was soon after out to death by his minister, Mahmood Khan Ghilue, the Afghan, who mounted the throne, and proved to be the ablest of the kings of Malwa during a long reign of forty seven years, which extended from 1435 to 1482 Some years after his accession, he invaded Guzerat with an army of 100,000 men, and pursued the feeble monarch to the promontory of Diu. The Guzerattee nobles, anxious to retueve the national honour, persuaded the queen to administer poison to him and then raised his son, Kootub Shah, to the throne, and resolved to make a vigorous effort for their independence. A pitched battle was accordingly fought under the walls of Ahmedabad in which Mahmood was f r the first and last time defeated, but seeing the day lost, le jut himself at the head of some troopers, and pushing through every obstacle bore off the regalia in triumph from the tent of the ling Notwithstu 1 . ing this partial reverse he seems to have had the unof structe l range of northern Ind a as we find him the next year murch ing to Biana, and establishing his son governor of Ajmere On his return to Malwache proceeded first against the Bahmuny kingdom in the Decean, then to Cuide h, and finally against the raigh of Chittore . .. ... Durn g the scenes of confusion at Della, which

Chitters, 15 4 have been previously described, one Hinduo kingdom in the north recovered its independence, and succeeded an manataming it for two centuries—the Rapport state of Chittore, or Mewar In the days of sultan Hoshung the throne was filled by Koombhoo, one of the most illustrious princes of that ancient line, who applied himself for fifty years vigorously to the consolidation of Papoot power, and founded the city of Koomulnere In 14.6, Kootub Shah of Guzerat, formed an allrance with Mahmood of Milua, for the conquest and partition of Mewar, but the result of the War is differently related The Mahomedan historians affirm that the Rapport prince acl nowledged himself the vassal of Walmood, while Hindoo writers state that he was t must hant, dignity, but to transfer the management of affairs to his son. The youth was accordingly proclaimed vizuer, and the king retired to his seright, which he had filled with 15,000 of the most beautiful women he could procure. In this female court, the pomp and distinctions of roality were strictly maintained, the royal body guard consisted of 500 Turk maidens dressed in male attire and armed with bows and quivers, and of 500 Abyssiuria guls furnished with firearms. Strange as it may appear, the king was allowed to enjoy this pageantry for eighteen years without a single attempt at rebellion. His son, Nazir ood deen, succeeded him in 1500, and his reign of twelve years was noted only by its cruelty and sensuality.

During the listless reign of Gheins ood deen, of Mahmood Shah, Malwa, and the dissolute reign of his son, the rival throne of Guzerat was filled by Malimood Shah, the brother of Kootub Shah, who ascended the throne in 1459, and shed lustre on it for fifty years Though growned at the carly age of fourteen, his talents were soon matured, and it was while yet a youth that he marched into Malwa, and created the diversion which has been noticed The European travellers who visited his court, awed by the dignity of his personal appearance, conceived the most extravagant opinion of his power They affirmed that a portion of his daily food consisted of mortal poisons, with which his system became so impregnated, that if a fly sat on him it dropped down dead He was the original, of the picture drawn by the British poet of the prince of Cambay, "whose food was asp, and basilish and toad But even without the power of d gesting poisons, he was a most pussant prince he attacked Gernal, a H ndoo fortress, of boundless antiquity and impregnable strength It fell on the third assault, when the king is said to have persuaded the raja and all his court to embrace Mahamedanisms Three years after, he overrun Cutch and defeated an army of Belochees, annexed Sinde to his dominions and extended his boundary to the Indus Soon after a Mahomedan saint complained to lum that on his m l return from Ormuz in Persia, he had been ill used and plundered by the people of Jugut, the lands end of India on the western coast. The king and his soldiers were couplly inflamed by the story of the holy man's wrongs, and they marched with great zeal "against the infernal minded rahmins," as the Mahomedan historian, Perishta, calls them Jugut was reduced, but the prates on the coast, who fled to the island of Bete, in the gulf or Cambay, are said to have fought twenty naval battles before they were finally subdued In 1482, Malimood led an army against the Hindoo ruler of the very ancient principality of Chumpanere. The place is sud to have been defended by 60,000 Rappoots, of whom a. large number fell in the siege, and the prince and his minis ters were put to death when it was found that they refused to become Musulmans The conflicts of the Guzerat navy with the Portuguese during, this reign, will be narrated here after On the death of this renowned prince in 1511, he was succeeded by his son. Mozuffer the Second verned at the time by Rana Sunga who had raised it to the summit of prosperity by his genius and valour. His army consisted of 80,000 horse, supported by 500 war elephants Seven raps of the highest rank, and a hundred and thirteen of inferior note attended his stirrup to the field. The rigin of Jeypore and Marwar served under his banuer, and he was the acknowledged head of all the Ramoot tribes. The historian . of Rapootana enumerates orgiteen pitched battles which he had fought with Malwa and Guzerat Those two sovereigns dreaded lest Medai Roy should obtain possession of the resources of Malwa, and unite with the Rana in establishing . Ha doo sovereignty throughout central India To meet this danger, they marched against Mandoo, the capital of Malwa, which was then hell by the son of Medin Roy, and which did not surrender until 19,000 Rapports had fallen in its defence Mahmood was restored to his kingdom, and in 1519 measured his strength with Rana Sunga In the lattle which ensued, the Malwa king was totally defeated and captured The generous Rajpoot plince personally attended to his wounds, and, when they were healed, liberated him without a ransom Hostilities however, continued between the ling of Guzerat and the Rana, which, after a succession of successes and defects, terminated in a solid peace Extinction of On the death of Mozuffer of Guzerat in 1526, the throne was successively occupied by two princes who speedily disappeared, when the wild and wayward Bahadoor Shah ascended it. A Lrother of his fled to Malwa, and, in an evil hour, the ling Mahmood granted lum an asylum, which so inconsed Balindoor, that he immediately, equipped a large army for the invasion of the country While this storm was gather ng on one side, the ill starred king provol ed the wrath of Rana Sunga who lost no time in forming an alliance with Enhadoor Shah, and their united forces poured down like a torrent upon Malwa Malmood in some measure retrieved his reputation by his noble conduct in the last scene of his life. Though his army was reduced

m 1

by the Bheels

to 3,000, he still continued to defend his capital with great courage, but he was at length obliged to capitulate, and on the 26th of May, a month after Baber had established the Moral dynasty on the throne of Delhi, the standard of Guzerat was planted on the battlements of Mandoo, and the kingdom of Malwa, then in its hundred and twenty fifth year, was absorbed in the dominions of its rival Mahmood and his seven sons were sent prisoners to Chumpanere, but were put to death on the road, in consequence of an attack render of a throne of immense value, which was subsequently enriched with additional jewels till it was estimated to be worth four crores of rupees Soon after Mahomed in a druil en revel granted an order on the treasury of Beejuy nugur, and the raja immediately sent an army across the Listna to revenge the insult, when the town of Moodgul was captured and its inribitants put to the sword Mahome !, on hearing of the slaughter, swore "that food and sleep should be unlawful to him till he had promitated the marty re of Moodgul by the slaughter of a hundred thousand midels" He crossed the Toombudra and pursued the rap for tince months from district to district, putting to death every Hudoo who fell into his hands. A pitched battle was at length fought, in which the Bahminy monarch was victorious, when having, as he hoped, completed his yow of revenge, he granted his of ponent honourable terms and on his return to hs own capital devoted his time to the improvement of ha domu ions He died in 137, after a leigh of seventeen years and was succeeded by his son Mujahid Slah who noe sessed the most majestic beauty of all the princes of his line and was exceeded by none in valour and fortitude. He bega a his reign by demanding from the rain of Beeluynugu , Paichore, Moodgul and other places lying in the dooab of the Kistna and the Toombudry the object of perpetual strife between the rival Hindoo and Mahomedan powers Tle demand was refused and a war commenced d rug which Mujahid chased the raja for six months through the wiols extent of the Curnatic and at length accepted his submission The merit of the young king in this campaign was rendered the more conspicuous by the disparity of his resources as compared with those of the Hindoo rain whose territories Malabar and Ceylon among his tributaries Mujahid was assessinated by his own uncle, after a trief reign of four years

Feroze the son of the assassin mounted the

Laroze and

Anmed Chah, throne in 1897, and his reign and that of his brother, which occupied thirty seven years, are considered the most pulmy days of the dynasty. Fernze teigned twenty fire years, and made twenty four campaigned carried fire and sword through the whole extent of the Carnatic, and constrained the rap of Beejuyaugur to submit to an annual tribute of a crore of rupees, and to give him his daughter in marriage He was a great patron of learning, and erected an observatory He established a mercantile navy, and instructed his commanders to bring the most learned men and the most handsome women from the ports they visited His seragho is said to have contained beauties from thirteen different nations, and the historians affirm that he was able to converse with each one in her own tongue He likewise made a point of copying sixteen pages of the Koran every fourth day The close of his reign was gloomy He wantonly engaged in hostilities with the raja of Beejuy nugur, and was totally defeated The triumphant Hindoos appeared anxious to bring up the arrears of vengeance due to their relentless enemies. In the various towns which they captured they razed the mosques to the ground, and erected platforms of the heads of the slain. The end of Feroze was histoned by these reverses, and he was succeeded by his brother Almed Shah, denominated Wully, or the saint, for the supposed, efficacy of his prayers in procuring rain in a season of drought Anxious to recover the prestige of the Mahomedan power he proceeded immediately to the invation of the Hindoo Engdom He crossed the Toombudin in great force, defeated the raja, and pursued the Hindoos in every direction with unreleating ferouty, hilting only to celebrate a feast whenever the number of the slain was computed to have reached 20 000 He obliged the raja to pay up all arrears of tribute, and then turned his arms a sainst Telingana, captured Mahomedan practice, pulled down the temples, and erected mosques with the materials. He then marched to the north, a degree that he caused a new city to be built on the site, which he called after his own name, Ahmedabad Beder, and adorned it with magnificent buildings. He was likewise engaged in two wars with Malwa, and a third was averted only by the cession of Berar. His generals were also sent to seize the Concap, or strip of land lying between the ghauts and the sea, from Mahim, or Bombay, to Goa But this expedition brought him in contact with the formidable naval power of Guzerat, and he was constrained to relinquish it. His wild career terminated in 1435

We pass on to the last substantive ling of the Deccan, Mahomed Shah, who was placed on the throne at the age of nme, in 1463

Mahomed Shah. During his minority the administration was conducted by the queen mother and two ministers. one of whom, the preceptor of the prince, was assassinated by her orders, because he was supposed to have acquired too great an influence over his pupil. The other, Malimood Gawan, was the greatest general and statesman of the age, and one of the most distinguished characters in the Mahomedan history of India He marched into the Concan, where two former expeditions had failed, and not only reduced the province and the ghauts above it to subjection, but wrested the island of Gor from the raja of Beejuynugur, who had usurped He then turned his attention to the eastern coast, reinstated the Ray of Orissa, who had been expelled and sought protection, and added Condardly and Rambmundry to the Bahminy territories But the Ray subsequently took ad vantage of a famine which was desolating the country to make an attempt to regain the districts he had lost. Mahmood Gawan marched down upon him with prompitude, and speedily extinguished all opposition, and annexed Masulmatam to the kingdom. The king, who had accompanied the expedition, having heard of the renowned temple of Canchi, or Con teveram, near Madras, the walls and roof of which were reported to be covered with plates of gold, rushed through the intervening country, at the head of 6,000 chosen horse, with such rapidity as to astound the various chiefs took possession of the temple, and despoiled it of its wealth before they could come to its rescue and from the Nerjudda to the Kistna. The minister now resolved to turn his attention to the improvement of the administration. He divided the kingdom into circle trovinces and curtailed the power of the governors, thus diminishing the chance of their revolt He introduced vigorous reforms into every branch of the government to the great disgust of all whose private interests were affected by them They determined, therefore, on his destruction, and having ingratiated themselves with the Abyssinian who had charge of his seal, induced him, when half drunk, to affix it to a blank sheet of paper, which they filled up with a treasonable letter to the Ray of Onssa, meeting him to revolt, and offering him assistance The paper was artfully produced before the king, as if it had been found by accident, and Hussun Bherry, a converted Hindoo, the mortal enemy of Mahmood, who had been his benefactor, endeavoured to inflame his mind against the minister. He was ordered into the royal presence and upbraided with his treason He excluded, "This is a great forgery, the seal is mine, but of the letter itself I am totally ignorant" The king, inflamed with wine and passion, ordered one of his Abyssinian slaves to cut him down Gawan calinly replied that the fate of an old man could be of little consequence, but that his death would seal the doom of the kingdom. The king turned into his seragho, the slave approached the minister, then in his seventy eighth year, and he knelt down, with his face towards Mecca, and received the fatal blow He died in graceful poverty Though he had served five monarchs, his cabinet was found to contain only 10,000 rupees The proceeds of the pageer allotted for the support of his office, he had in part, distributed among his officers, and, in part, disbursed among the poor in his master's name The money which he had brought with him into the country had been employed in commerce, the profits of which, after providing for his kitchen on the moderate scale of two rupces a day, were assigned to the poor in his own name The king ducd within a twelve month of his minister, a prey to remorse, exclaiming, in the paroxysms of his ago 1y, that Malimood Gawan was tearing him to p eccs

Under the powerful genius of Mahmood the Bahminy lungoom reached its greatest limits.

It is unnecessary farther to pursue the history

m 1

independent states

the Pahm av perity set with the stroke which deprived the Lamina great minister of life Mahmood Shah, the son of 1.49-1512 the late ling, ascended the thione in 1482, and lived on, though he can scarcely be said to lave reigned, for thirty seven years, the kingdom crumbled away, as governor after governor revolted, and it was at length resolved into five

While the Bahminy kingdom was thus crumb Blan of the Por ling to picces, another rice of adventurers aptuguese power peared on the western coast of India, and gave a new direction to its politics and commerce A Portuguese expedition landed in the harbour of Calicut, and paved the way for the eventual transfer of power from the Mahomedans to the Christians For some time previous to this memorable event, the general progress of improvement in Europe and the increase of mutical skill and boldness, had inspired its maritime nations with a strong desire to discover the way to India by sea, and to participate in its rich commerce, which was then monopolised by the Veneticus The Portuguese were at this time the foremost and most enterprising among the navigators of Europe, and John, king of Portugal, anxious to make the circuit of the continent of Africa, had sent his admiral, Bartholomew Dias, on this perilous undertaking It was he who first doubled the Cape of Good Hope, which he named the Cape of Storms in reference to the tempestuous weather which he encountered. But the king was so highly elated with the success of the expedition and the prospects which it opened to him, that he changed the name to that which it has ever since borne Soon after, Christopher Columbus, hoping to reach India by sailing westward, obtained the patronage of the king of Spain, and, launching boldly into the ocean, which had never been traversed before, made the discovery of America . His successful return from this voyage of unexampled peril filled all Europe with as tonishment

The larg of Portugal was deeply chaggned 20 persons of the advances of Columbus, had Jepnved hum of the opportunity of adding another continent to his dominions, but he resolved to seek compensation for this loss in an attempt to reach India, by doubling the £ape, and stretching to the castward. An expedition was accordingly fitted out for this purpose, consisting of three vessels, the command of which was entrusted to Vasco de Gama. The whole population of Lisbon poured out to witness his departure on the 8th of July, 1497, and the sailors went through various religious ceremomes, as men who never expected to return Vasco was four months reaching the Cape, which, however, he doubled with a fair and gentle breeze. He anchored at Melinda on the African coast, where he was supplied with a pulot to conduct his vessels to India. On the 22nd of May. 1498, he east anchor on the Malabar coast, off Calcut, which presented to his delighted eyes the appearance of a noble town with a fertile plain rising up in the back ground, bounded by a distant range of lofty mountains Calicut, then a place of extensive traffic, belonged to an independent Hindog rais. called the Zamorin, and lay considerably to the south of the limit to which the Mahomedan conquests had extended. The harbours on the coast muned stely to the north of it, be-the respectable natives who happened to be on board his vessel and refused to release them till his own officers were surrendered The ram manifested some hesitation to comply with this reasonal le demand, and Vasco weighed anchor in haste and began to sail out of the harbour with the hostages Presently, several boats were seen to pull off from the shore, one of which contained his officers whom the Zamorio now hastened to release Vasco sent back some of the natures he had detuned but resolved to tale several of them with him to Lisbon, to give them an opportunity of viewing the city and reporting its grandeur on their return. Having now completed his cargoes, he set sail for Europe, and, on the 29th of August, 1499, re entered the Tagus, in regal pomp, after an absence of twenty six months. Men of all ranks crowded to welcome him, and to admire the vessels which had performed so marvellous a voyage, the king showered honours on him, and the nations of Europe were enraptured with the discovery of a new and easier path to the land of fabulous wealth

VASCO DE GAMA LANDS AT CALICITE

1.m

Second vayare
unter Cabral 1493.

A second expedition was fitted out in the same year, consisting of thirteen ships and 1,200 men, the command of which was given to Cabral IIIo was accompaned by eight firms, who were sent to train! In was a contemporated by eight firms, who were sent to preach Christianity to the natives, and he was directed to carry fire and sword into every province that refused to listen to them. In the course of the voyage he discovered Basal on the coust of South America, and took possession of it in the name of his sovereign, in the year 1500. In doubling the Cupe he encountered terrific grices, and lost four of his ships, in one of which was the celebrated admiral Diac, who thus found a grave in the serie which he had been the first to explore Cabral on reaching Calcut, restored the natives who had been taken to Portugat, where they had been treated with distinguished kindness. He was received with much courtest by the Leunorin, to whom he presented grits of rare beauty and value. But the Moogish merchants, annoyed at driven from the shores of India, effectually prevented them from obtaining cargoes Cabral presented a remonstrance to the Zamorin, and received authority, as he supposed, to se quester vessels carrying the Mahomedan flag A Moorish slup with a rich cargo was accordingly seized, the merchants histened to the rain with their complaints, and obtained permi sion to expel the intruders. The factory which the Portuguese had erected was forthwith attacked, and all the foreigners in it were put to death Cabral immediately seized and burnt ten Moorish craft, after having transferred their cargoes to his own ships He then laid his vessels abreast of the town, and having set it on fire with his artillery, set sail for the neighbouring town of Cochin, where he formed a treaty with the rula, and returned to Lisbon in July, 1001 north with a division of the Portuguese fleet, when the combined squadrons bore down upon him. The Portuguese fought with the callantry of European sulors, but the supenority of the enemy in the number of their slips, and the calibre of their gans, gave them the victory. The gallant Lorenzo, whose vessel was entangled in some fishing stakes. and thus exposed singly to the fire poured in upon him from all sides, fell covered with wounds, after performing producies of valour, which filled even the Mihomedans with admiration To avenge the death of his son, Almeyda reduced the flourish the enemy, whom he found anchored in the harbour of Diu burnt or captured, and the smaller craft escaped up the river Peace was subsequently concluded between the belligarents.

**** 7

ing port of D bul to ashes, and then proceeded in search of The conflict was long and doubtful, for the Leyptian and Guzerattee admirals were men of great nautical experience and valour, but all their larger vessels were at length either and all the European prisoners were restored laces, then the great emporium of trade in the eastern archipelago, with an armament of 800 Portuguese soldiers and 600 natives whom he had enlisted and trained native prince is said to have assembled an army of 20,000 men to resist him, but the valour and discipline of his little force soon placed the city in his hands. The possession of this important position was immediately secured by the erection of a strong fort, and a new field of commercial enterprize to Siam, Java, and Sumatry, was thus opened to his country men His efforts were next directed to the west, and he equipped a powerful squadron for the conquest of Ormuz, in the Persian Gulph The imposing force which accompanied him effectually deterred the native prince from resistance, and Albuquerque was permitted to take possession of the island, and to ruse a fortification in it Ormuz rose ripidly in importance, the town was filled with 40,000 inhabitants, and became one of the most flourishing settlements in those seas Thus had the genus of Albuquerque, in the short space of nine years, built up the Portuguese power in the east, and given them the command of the sea, and the control of the traffic throughout the eastern archipelago, which they continued to enjoy for a hundred years without a anal Though he never obtained possession of a single pro vince on the continent of India, his authority was supreme over 12,000 miles of coast, and it was sustained by an irre sistible fleet and thirty factories, of which many were fortified He was at length abruptly superseded in his command by the orders of his own sovereign, who did not condescend to soften the disgrace by any marl of distinction, or even by the courtesy of a letter The ingratitude of which he was the victim, broke his heart, he expired on the burque which was conveying him to Gos, and was interred in the settlement which he had created, under the lamentations and tears of natives and Europeans, by when he was equally belovad.

CHAPTER IV.

MOOTE DYNASTY. BABER TO ARRAR, 1026-1605

The Mogral drawsty 15.4. Tree month of April, 15°6 Sultan Baber captured to flounds for a hundred and eighty years, under a succession, unprecedented in India of six monard, distinguished by their provices in the field, and, with one exception, by their abulty in the cabinet.

Baber, the sixth in descent from Timur, was B. ber's early the son of Sheikh Mirza, to whom the fertile province of Fergina, on the upper course of the Jaxartes had been allotted in the distribution of the family possessions His mother was a descendant of Jenghis Khan, and it has been noted by historians as a remarkable fact that the empire founded by Baber should be known in history only as the Mogul empire, while he himself executed the name of Mogul Baber at pears to have inherited that spirit or enterprise which distinguished both his renowned ancestors and at the carly age of fifteen, when he succeeded to the throne, commenced that adventurous career, which he pursue l without interruption for thirty five years. His first campaign was against the city of Samarcand the metropoles of Trans oxiana, which be castured with little difficulty, but he had not held it a hundred days before he was recalled to the wlefence of his paternal kingdom. He subsemently made three successful efforts to obtain possession of that city which he coveted as the carr al of Timur, and was three expelled from it to his buoyant spirit Cseeing no hope of extending his conquests beyond the Oxus, he seized the city of Cabul in the year 1504, and succeeded in maintaining possession of it for twenty years During this period be was incessantly employed in defending or enlarging his dominions, and never enjoyed a year of repose His greatest peril arose from the progress of the Uzbeks, a tribe of ferocious Tartars, now swarming from their native hive, and seeking new settlements in the south Then leader Shaibek had swept the posterity of Timur from Transoviana and Khorasan, and in his progress towards the Indus had captured Candahar and threatened Cabul * Had he been able to murch at once on that capital, he would probably have extinguished for ever the hopes of Baber, but he was recalled from these conquests by the hostility of Ismael Shali, the powerful chief of the tribe which had recently seized the throne of Persia, and established the dynasty of the Soplus The Uzbek chief was routed and slun, and Baber seized the opportunity of again occupying Samarcand, from which he was again expelled in the course of a few months

92

To compensate for this disappointment, he ne I tions to is in 1519 turned his attention to India, where the imbeci-15.5 lity of the emperor of Delhi presented a tempta tion too strong to be resisted by a descendant of Timur His first irruption was in the year 1519, and it was followed by two others, in five years, though with partial success In 1524 he resumed this ambitious project, and overrin the Punjab, where he was joined by Alla ood deen, the brother of the emperor, with Dowlut Khan, and other officers, who had been alienated from him by his constant of pressions. But Baber, after having advanced as far as Sirbind, was obliged to return across the Indus, to repel an invasion from the north, and Dowlut Khan, on his departure, deserted his standard and took possession of the Punjab. Alla ood-deen, who had been left in charge of the province, fled to Cabul, and was immediately sent back to India by Baber, with a welluppointed army, but was signally defeated by the emperor, under the walls of Delhi. Baber now advanced on his fifth and last expedition with an army not exceeding 12,000 men, but they were all experienced veterans. The emperor, Ibrahim Lodi, advanced to meet him with an army generally estimated at 100,000, and a thousand elephants. The destury of India was decided on the field of Pamput. The engage ment lasted from sunnse to sunset, and resulted in the total defeat of the impernal army, and the death of the emperor, and 15,000 of his troops. Delhi opened her gates to the victor in May, 1526, and Baber vaulted into the vacant throne, and, as a token of his success, sort gifts from the treasury to the most celebrated Mahomedan shanes in Asia.

But Delhi had long ceased to be the capital and State of Ind a the mistress of India The great Mahomedan empire had been broken up more than a century and a half before, by the extravagances of Mahomed Toghluk, and at the period of Baber's accession the various provinces were in the possession of independent rulers. In the southern extremity of Hindostan, the great Hindoo monarch of Beenuyaugur claimed the allegiance of the various native chiefs who had never submitted to the Mahomedan voke Farther to the north lay the territories of the five kings of Becjapore, Ahmednugur, Golconda, Beder, and Borar, who were established on the dissolution of the Bahminy kingdom. The province of Guillat was governed by a wild youth, who was ambitious of trying conclusions with the Mogul in the field Rana Sunga, the most powerful prince of his race, was paramount in Rupootana. The opulent kingdom of Benral. including Behar, was ruled by an Afghan family, and the "sacred soil," as it was called, of Onssa, was in the possession of its ancient Hindoo dynasty Still nearer Delhi, an inde-pendent prince held his court at Jounpore, and supported it from the revenues of Oude The victors of Baber, therefore, only gave hun the command of the districts to the north west of Dell i, and a narrow tract of land, stretching along the

Jumna to Agra. He had India yet to conquer, but his generals shrunk from the task, and entreated him to return to the cooler and more genul chinate of Afghanistan, where they might enjoy the booty they had acquired at Delhi and Agri. But Baber had crossed the Indus, not simply to plunder provinces, but to found an empire, and he announced his unafterable resolution to continue in India, and pursue his career; at the same time, however, he granted permission to all those to return who preferred ease to glory. His ardour subdued their reluctance, and only one of his generals availed himself of this privilege, and he and his soldiers were dismissed with honour, and laden with wealth, in the hope of inducing others to resort to Baber's standard. In the course of four months after the battle of Pannut, all the country held by Ibrahim Lodi had been secured, and the revolted kingdom of Jounpore brought under subjection

But a more formidable enemy now appeared in 6.22m, 15.7 the field. Rana Sunga, the Rappoot prince of Chittore, and at this time the most powerful of all the sovereigns north of the Nerbudda, clated by a recent triumph over the Ling of Malwa, espoused the cause of the dethroned dynasty of Delhi All the princes of Rajpootana ranged themselves under his banner, and he advanced with 100,000 men to drive Baher back across the Indus. The first conflict took place at Futtehpore Sikri, where the advanced guard of the Moguls was totally routed by the Rappoots. Many of Baber's troops on this descried their colours, some even went over to the enemy, and all were dispirited. Accustomed as he had been to dangers for thirty years, this extraordinary, perd staggered him, but he never despaired. He states in his memoirs that in this emergency he repented of his sine, and determined to reform his life, that he foreswore the use of wine, and broke up his gold and silver cups, and distributed their value among the poor. He resolved to allow his beard to grow like a true Musulman, and promised, if God gave has the victory, to remit the stemp tax to the faithful.

Animated by his example, his generals took an eath on the Koran to conquer or to die In this fever of enthusiasm Baber led them against the enemy, and by the aid of his efficient artillery obtained a signal victory, which completely broke the power of Chittore He celebrated his success by constructing a pyramid of the heads of the slain, and assuming the title of Ghazee, or champion of the faith

The next year Baber attacked Chunderge, held Congress of Chan lerce. by Medni Poy, whose history, in connection with Dote and the kingdoms of Guzerat and Malwa has been already related Finding his position untenable, he and his Rappoots devoted themselves to death with the usual cere momes, and rushed with frenzy on the Mogul swords Those who survived the onset put themselves to death. In the following year, Baber extended his authority over Oude and south Behar But his constitution, which had been gradually impaired by long indulgence, was worn out by these severe exertions in an uncongenial climate So active had been his life, that for thirty eight years he had never kept the feast of the Ramzan twice in the same place. He died at Agra in 1530, at the age of fifty, and his remains were conveyed to Cabul and interred in a beautiful spot which he had himself selected for his tomb The sumple and chaste monument raised over his grave con tinued to attract admiration three centuries after his death Among the Mahomedan pances of India, no monarch is hell in higher estimation than Baber His career exhibited that romantic spirit of adventure of which nations are always proud His personal courage bordered on rashness, his activity was almost fabulous While labouring under a wastur discase he rode a hundred and sixty miles in two days, and swam across the Ganges He was, however, rather a valuat solder than a great general and he lot nearly as many battles as he won, but he never lost heart, and was as buoyant after a defeat as after a victory. Amid t all the bustle of war, he found time for the cultivation of literature, and his Persian poetry has been always admired for its elegance The little lessure he enjoyed from the labours of the field, he devoted to the construction of aque ducts, reservoirs, and other works of public utility There is no Indian prince with whose individual character we are so familiar, and this is owing to his own vivid delineation of it in the volume of parsonal memoirs he compiled, in which he records his transgressions with so much candour, and his repentance with so much sincerity, and recounts his friend ships with so much cordiality, that in spite of all his failings he becomes an object of personal esteem

96

Humayoon succeeded his father at the close of succeeds to the 1530, but the first incident in his reign exhibited that easiness of disposition to which his subse quent misfortunes were chiefly to be attributed. His brother, Kamran, the governor of Cabul and Candahar, hesitated to acknowledge his authority, and Humayoon, not only con sented to resign these provinces to him, but added the Punjab also By this injudicious act he was deprived of the means of recruiting his army from the countries beyond the Indus, a loss which was severely felt in proportion as Baber's vetc rans died out, and Humayoon was obliged to depend on the troops he could enlist in Hindostan. In the third year of his reign, Humayoon became involved in hostilities with Bahadoor Shah This impetuous prince who ascended the throne at the age of twenty, was incessantly engaged in aggressive wars during the eleven years of his reign. He had subjugated the inde-pendent kingdom of Malwa and annexed it to 15.19

his own dominions He had compelled the kings of Ahmed nugur and Beder to do him personal homage He had added the ancient and venerable city of Oojein to his conquests, and sacked the city of Chittore, in the defence of which 3º,000 Rajpoots are said to have fallen Humayoon demanded the surrender of a fugitive conspirator, which was haughtily refused, on which he marched at once into the country

Bahadoor Shah had planted his army in an entrenched camp at Mandshore, trusting to his fine artillery, mained by Por-tuguese gunners and commanded by Roomy Khan, originally a Turkish slave, but now the first engineer officer in India Humayoon besieged the camp for two months, cut off its supplies, and reduced the king to such straits, that he was obliged to fly, and eventually to take refuge in Din, the most remote harbour in the peninsula of Guzerat Humayoon a Humayoon immediately overran the province, rallans capture and proceeded against the fortress of Chumpanere, in which the accumulated wealth of the dynasty was deposited. With only three hundred select troops, he climbed up the perpendicular rock on which it was built by means of steel spikes, and mastered it by an exhibition of herosm which rivalled the exploits of his father. The gal-lantry of his officers and soldiers was rewarded with as much gold and silver as they could herp on their shields But his further progress was arrested by the necessity of returning to Agra, to arrest the progress of Shere Khan On his retirement, Bahadoor Shah again took the field and regained his kingdom as rapidly as he had lost it, but he did not long enjoy it. While at Diu, he had negotiated with the Portucue-e for three hundred Europeans to assist him in recovering his kingdom, and in return granted them permission to establish a factory at that port They began immediately to surround it with a wall, the rudiments of a fortification, and brought up a fleet to protect the progress of the work Bahadoor Shah had all the native horror of European intrusion.

in constructing a bridge across the Ganges Before it was completed, he was attacked and completely defeated by his rival, who now assumed the title of Shere Shah, and openly assured to the emoire

Humayoon at length reached Agra, and extin Humayoen at length reached Agra, and extra same defeate, and detas across guished the hostile schemes of his brothers the late, the limit is Eight months were passed in assembling an irray for the great stringgle with his formulable rival, who employed Humaroon this period in subjugating and organizing Bengal The two armies met in the neighbourhood of Cunouj and Humayoon experienced a second and more fatal defeat. He fled from the field of battle to Agra, pursued by Shere Shah and had barely time to remove his family to Delhi. From thence he was driven to Lahore, where his brother, instead of affording him an asylum, hastened to make his peace with the victor, and was allowed to retire to his territories beyond the Indus Thus fell the kmgdom which Baber had established, and not a vestige of Mogul sovereignty remained in India at the end of fourteen years The throne of Delhi was restored to the Afghans Humayoon made the best of his way with his few remaining adherents to Sinde, where he spent eighteen nonths in fruitless negotiations with its chiefs. He then resolved to throw himself on the protection of Maldeo the powerful Rupport prince of Marwar but on approaching the capital found tle raja more disposed to betray than to succour bun. The wretched emperor endeavoured to cross the desert to Amercote, and was subjected to incredible hardships during the march. The son of Maldeo, eager to revenge the intrision of the emperor and the slaughter of kine in his territories. pursued 1 im with the utmost rigour At length Humayoon reached Amereote with only seven mounted attendants, and it was in these wretched circumstances that I is queen who had nobly shared with him all the disasters of this journey red of Albar gave bigth to a son afterwards the illustrious Albar, destined to ruse the Mogul empire to the punacle of greatness liter another senes of reverses.

Humayoon was obliged to quit India, and seek an asylum at Candahar.

Leaving Humayoon across the Indus, we turn Five years to the progress of Shere Shah, who now mounted brilliant reign of Shere Shah. the throne of Delhi, and established the Soor dynasty While he was combating the emperor, Bengal revolted, as a matter of course, but was speedily reduced to subjection In 1542 he conquered the province of Malwa, and in the succeeding year reduced the fortress of Raisin, remarkable for its unfathomable antiquity, and for the honour of having been erected, according to local tradition, by the great national hero of the Ramayun It was here that his reputation was tarnished by the only stain ever attached to it The Hindoo garrison had surrendered on terms, but the Mahomedan doctors assured him that, according to the precepts of the Koran, no faith was to be kept with infidels, and the midels were, therefore, slaughtered almost to a man In 1544 Shere invaded Marwar with 80,000 men It was defended by a body of 50,000, and by its own sterlity Through the artifice of letters intended to be intercepted, he contrived to raise suspicions regarding his chiefs in the mind of the raja, and thus induced him to retire from the contest, but one chief, indignant at this distrist, fell on the emperor's force with 12,000 men with such fury as to expose him to the greatest peril, and the emperor, alluding to the barrenness of the country, said that "he had nearly lost the empire for a handful of millet" Soon after, the capture of Cluttore placed Rapportana at his feet, and he proceeded to the attack of Calmier, one of the strongest fortresses, in His death, Bundlecund, but was killed by the explosion of a 1345, and Character magazine as he was superintending the batteries Thus prematurely ended the career of Shere Shah As he inflicted the greatest humiliation on the Moguls, the historians of their party have treated him as a usurper, and louded his memory with obloquy But his right to the throne was as valid as that of the Tartar adventurer Baber, and in traveller

Reign of h .

both cases it was equally based on the decision of the sword

But the Lingdom which he gained by conquest, he governed with the greatest beneficence, and the brief period of five years in which he held supreme power, is the most brilliant in the annels of India He was a man of consummate ability, distinguished not less by his military exploits than by the triumphs of his civil administration. Though incessantly engaged in the field he found time for a complete reform of every branch of the government, and his civil institutions survived his dynasty and became the model of those of Albar He constructed a grand trunk road from the banks of the Indus to the bay of Bengal, through a distance of 2,000 miles and planted it with trees, and adorned it with wells and carnyansers, at short distances, for the convenience of travel lers, and erected mesques for the benefit of the devout He appears to have been the first prince who establi hed a mounted post for the conveyance of the mals. At the end of three centuries, his stately mausolcum at Sasseram, the place of his birth and of his burial, continues to recall the remembrance of his grandeur and his glory to the mind of the

His eldest son was set aside by the nobles for imbeculty, and his second son, Jelal Khan was raised to the throne under the title of Selim After quelling a dangerous rebellion by his prompti tude and victor, he was enabled to pass nine years in tran quility, indulging his hereditary taste for public works, and if his reign had extended over a longer period, we should probably have heard little or nothing of a Mogul dynasty It was the profiguey of his successor that brought the sor of Baber again to India He was the brother of Selim, and of Proces again to India

Its was the brother of Schin, and and atter having muth-red his son, mounted the throne, and an generally known in history simply by the name of Adult He was remarkable only for his agocanace and produgality, and exhibited all those purple-born vices which, in India, presage the fall of a dynasty But the rum of this royal figure is said-but only by Mogul Instorians-to have been as mean as his origin. Add having exhausted his treasury by profligate waste, began to resume the jaygeers of his Patan nobles, and they went one by one into insurrection. Five independent sovereignties were forthwith established in the dominions under the crown, till nothing was left to it, except some of the districts around the metropolis Hemu presented a bold front to these difficulties, and had succeeded in reducing two of the rebels, when the aspect of affurs was at once changed by the appearance of Humayoon on the banks of the Indus.

prince On his death, which happened som after, Humayoon entered the city as a friend, but put the greater portion of the Persian garnison to the sword, an act of perfidy which has fixed an indulible struin on his memory. Having thus obtuined Computer of Dosession of Candahra, he muched to Orbul and Mannian call the struin of the muched to Orbul and Mannian call the struin of the muched to Orbul and Mannian call the struin of the muched to Orbul and Mannian call the struin of the muched to Orbul and Mannian call the struin of the much of the struin of the s

by Itumpose, associated has similarly in the province, the sistence is a similar to mountain a protracted struggle with his brothers, in which he was alternately victorious and defeated. His brother Kamrun at length fell into his hand,, and to his disgrace, he ordered the sight of the unfortunate prince to be extinguished.

After ten years of incessant warfare, the in He crosses the Ladas and creasing confusion at the capital of India tempted remounts the thrung, 155. Humayoon to make a bold stroke to regain the throne He cros ed the Indus in 1522 and obtained a complete victory over Secunder Soor, who had usurped the imperial authority at the capital, and who was posted at Such with a body of 80 000 men In this battle the young Akbar gained his first laurels Leaving the your g prince in the Punjab to watch the movements of the usurper, Humayoon hastened to Delhi, and mounted the throne he had lost fifteen years before. But before le could recover the domin one attached to it his career was brought to a clo e by a fatal accident. Six months after he had entered Delli while descending the steps of his library, he heard the muezzin's call to prayer, and stopped to repeat the creed, and sat down As he endervotred to ri e, leaning on his staff, it slipped on the polisted steps and he fell over the purpet, and four days after closed his chequered life, at the age of forty nine Accepted Akbar, the greatest prince of the dynasty of Abbar, the greatest prince of the dynasty of Abbar, the greatest prince of the dynasty of Mogula to the summit of renown, was only thirteen years and if tree months of age when the death of Humayon I theed in moon the fronce, which to continued to adorn for first years. He was the contemporary of Queen Elizabeth, his reign having begun two years before, and ended two years after hers, and thus, by a memorable coincidence, this period of half a century has been rendered as illustrious in the annals of England as of India During the minority of Akbar, the regency continued in the hands of Byrum Khan, a Turkoman, the companion of Humayoon in all his vicissitudes, and the greatest captain and statesman of the age, but a man of austere manners and stern bigotry Hemu, the Hindoo general of Sultan Adılı, was employed in quelling a rebellion in Bengal when he heard of the death of Humryoon, and conceiving fresh hopes from that event deposited the emperor at Chunar, and moved up with an army of 80,000 men which was swelled to 100,000 as he advanced Defeat of Agra and Delhi opened their gates to hun, and so completely were the commanders in Akbar's army confounded by the rapidity of his successes, that they entreated their master to abandon India and return to Afghanistan Byram alone advised an immediate and vigorous attack, and Akbar, though only a stripling, seconded his ardour armies met at Pamput, and the destiny of India was a second time decided on that field Hemu, after prodigies of valour, was completely defeated, and conducted, bleeding from his wounds, to the tent of Akbar Byram urged hun to secure for himself the religious ment of slaving an infidel, but the generous youth refused to imbrue his hands in the blood of a gallant and now helpless foe, and Byram struck off the head of the captive with one stroke of his seymetar herd of the captive with one stroke of his segmentar

Armonomera I. It was the military talent of Byrem, and the forform the throne but the minister had grown too bug for a subject. So great indeed was his power and influence that for four years after his accession, Akbar felt himself a mero tyber in his own domining. Such thril lom was indocrible to a high spirited prace, and when he had receded for age of the subject to throw off the jok. On the flee of the subject when the highest abruptly to Della, and unmediately issued a proclamation announcing that he had taken the government into his own hands, and that no orders were to be obeyed but those which issued from himself Byram felt that his power was slipping away, and endcavoured to regun it, but he had alienated all the public officers by his brughty demeanour, and in the time of his adversity found that he was without a friend. He retired to Nagore, giving out that he was proceeding on pilgrimage, but he lingered there in the hope of receiving some gracious message from his master Akbar, however, discharged him from all his offices and requested him to hasten his departure. Stung by this indignity, he assembled an army, and murched against the imperial troops. He was signally defeated, and constrained to throw himself on the mercy of the emperor As the fallen minister entered the royal tent, with his turban humbly sus pended on his neck, and cast himself at the feet of the prince whom he had cherished from his cradle, Albar hastened to raise him, and seated him on his right hand, investing him with a robe of honour, and offering him the choice of any post in the empire The pride of Byram, who had been the instrument of erecting the Mogul throne a second time in India, led him to prefer a retreat to Mecca, and he accordingly proceeded to the sea coast, but was assassinated on the route by an Afghan, whose father he had put to death Akl ar was now his own master, at the age of

Akl ar was now his own master, at the age of cighteen, but he was surrounded with difficulties eighteen which would have broken a spirit of less energy which would have broken a spirit of less energy for some time after its establishment, the dynasty of the Mognis was weaker than any which had risen to power since the Mahomadans first crossed the India's It was not connected with any large and powerful tribes beyond that river, ready to support the progress of their country men. It had no resources in reserve: Whir's array was simply in assembly of mercanizes driven together by the hope of plunder from the various countr's of Central Isas. His officers were only a band of adventurers, bound to has family by no this of here-

bar a concrete Adılı, advanced to recover lus dominions, and was 1500-1507 defeated by Zeman Khan, but that general, despising the youth of his sovereign, withheld the royal share of the booty, and manifested such a spirit of independence, that Akbar was obliged to take the field, and reduce him to obedience

Remainders her valour. She led her urbay in person against Habs praces, the invader, and maintained the conflict with the greatest heroism till she received a wound in her eye. The troops, missing her command, began to give way, when she, to avoid falling into the hands of the enemy, seized the weapon of the elephant driver and plunged it into her own bosom Her exploits are still a favourate theme with the Ilindoo bards. The booty obtained by this capture consisted of a hundred jars of gold coin independently of jewels and gold and silver images, and Asof Jah appropriated the largest portion of it to his own use and then joined the hostile confideracy, which now included the most eminent of Abbar's generals.

The dancer of the emperor was extreme. It hard involve was as much a struggle for the throne, as the hard beautile of Panjut, and the question at issue was, whether the empire should be Mogul or Uzbek Akbars detachments were repeatedly defeated, but he muntained the conflict with unfunching resolution for two years Just at this critical juncture, his brother Hahm ungratefully took advantage of his embarrassments, and endeavoured to wrest the province of Labore from the crown Akbar was obliged to quit the pursuit of the Uzbeks to meet this new revolt, which, however, he succeeded in crusting at once On his icturn to the south, he found that the revolted generals had obtained possess ion of the districts of Allahabad and Oude, and were preparing to advince on the capital. The raiss had set in when all military operations are generally suspended, but he did not hestite to march against them and by the Alterson throughout his dominions. Nothing gives us a history but his dominions. Nothing gives us a history of the real greatness of Albars age, he see ssfully maintained of history muintained of hi promittude and vigour of his attack, comiletely broke the strength of the confederacy and at the age of twenty five, had it a happiness of seeing his authority firmly established

TOTAL. 201 AKRAR CAPTURES OUTTORE. Baber, with a liberality of spirit foreign to every preceding conqueror, had determined to strengthen his government by He en-Matrimonial matrimonial alliances with the Hindoos all some with couraged his son Humayoon to espouse a daughter the Raincol of Bhugwan Dass, the rap of Jeypore Akbar, f finces following his father's example, allied himself with the same house, as well as with the ruling family of Marnar, or Joudhnore At the same time he conferred an office of high dignity at his court on the rain of Jeypore. Thus the purest Hindoo blood was mingled with that of the Mahomedan con querors, and the princes of Raipootana gloried in these impenal alliances as conferring additional dignity on their families But the orthodox house of Chittore, wrapped up in its religious pride and exclusiveness, disdained any such connection, and even excommunicated the raps of Jes pore and Marwar, though Bappa, the founder of that family, considered by his countrymen as the "sun of Hindoo dignity."

married Mahomedan wives without number, and left a hundred and thirty circumcised children to the number of 8,000. With that generosity of character which distinguished Akbar, he crected a statue to the memory of his heroic foe in the most conspicuous place of his palace Capture and at Delhi. The fall of Chittore—which from that shandonment of period was abandoned for the new capital, Oddy-Chitore, 1968. Pore, called by the founder after his own name—was considered the most fatal blow which had fullen for ages on that royal house. The remembrance of this event has been perpetuated throughout India by a most remarkable practice. Akbar estimated the golden ornaments taken from the Rappoots at seventy four munds and a hulf. The numerals, 744, were therefore deemed accursed. The Rappoots, and more particularly the Marwarces, are now the largest and most enterprizing mercantile community in India, and their commercial correspondence bears the impress of these figures, signifying that "the sin of the sluighter of Cluttore is invoked on any one who violates the secrecy of the letter" The practice has now become universal throughout India.

Compared A Albar's next enterprize was one of greater that a conquests of Bahadoor Shah about forty years before this period, and enriched by minitime commerce, was estimated to yield a revenue of five cores of rupees, and to be equal to the support of 200 000 troops, lut it had been a prey to faction since his death. Four week and proflighte monarchs had filled the throne in thirty six years. The distraction of the kingdom had been nervised by the arrival of the Mirzas, as they are styled by the native historians, a family connected with Aklar by the ties of blood, who had revolted against his authority, and, having been driven out of his dominions, transferred their intrigues to Guzert. Etimad Khan, originally a Hindoo slave, who now managed the government in the name of Moraffer the Third seeing no other mode of quelling the factions in the country, invited Akbar to take pose essent of it. The emperor proceeded with a powerful army to Puttun, where that facile monarch advanced to meet pestruction of 1800 of Bengal by Akbar, that the ancent city of Gour was depopulated and abandoned, after having existed more than twenty centures. It was admirably situated on the confines of Bengal and Behar for the government of both these provinces, it had been the capital of a hundred langs, by whom it was successively adorned with the most superbeddifces. It extended along the banks of the Ganges, and was defended from the encrochements of the river by a stone embankment, not less than fifteen miles in length. This magnificent city, the seat of wealth and luxury, was suddenly humbled to the dust by some pestilentral disease, which has never been satisfactorily explained. The establishments of government were transferred, in the first instance, to Tondah, and then to Rajurshal

The next important event in the reign of Akl ar Cashmere, 1557 was the conquest of Cashmere, by his brother in law, the raja of Jeypore, when the Mahomedan ling of that province was enrolled among the nobles of the court, and this lovely valley, the paradist of Asia became the summer retreat of the emperors of Dellu The attempt which Akbar was required to make, soon after, to curb the highland tribes around the plun of Peshawur, proved for more arduous These wild mountaineers, of whom the Eusufzus and the Khyberces were the most considerable and most turbulent, had been for ages the plague of every successive ruler of the produce. It was their hereditary belief that the fastnesses of the mountains had been bestowed on them by the Creator, to enable them to levy contributions on the industry of the lains Fiery form of conciliation and coercion had been employed in vain to restrain their inroads On this occasion Akbur sent an army against them, under the joint command of his foster brother, and his great personal friend and favourite, the Hindoo raja B erbull Their troops were decoyed into the defiles and cut off, and, to the infinite regret of the emperor, Beerbull was among the slain. So complete him, and resigned his crown without an effort, and Guzerat, after two centuries and a half of in lependence, was again annexed to the crown of Delhi As soon, however, as Akbar returned to his carital with a large portion of his army, Mirra Hussem the most turbulent of the brothers, rused a new revolt, and the imperial generals were reduced to great struts and obliged to act on the defensive. The runs had set in, Jut Albar was ready for action at all sc isons He immediately dispatched a force of 2,000 choice cavalry from Agra and followed it with 300 of his own guards marching in that season, no less than four hundred and fifty miles in The rapid ty and vigour of his movements con founded the rebuls, they suffered a signal defeat, and the subjugation of the province was completed The attention of Akliar was next directed to the Ovissa con Quered by the Afghans, 1550 recovery of Bengal, but before narrating this expedition, it is necessary to advert to the for tunes of the neighbouring kingdom of Orissa. That country l ad been governed by the family of the Guju putces, or lords of the eleptant, from a very remote period of Hindoo history About 400 years before the time under review, the throne was occupied by the dynasty of the Gunga bungsus The princes of this race expended the revenues of the country in the erection of the most magnificent temples, and extended their authority from the river Hooghly to the Godavery, and on one occasion carried their arms as far south as Con peveram in the vicinity of Madras A little before the period of Albar's accession, the king of Golconda, who was endea vouring to extend his power over the Hindoo tribes on the sea coast, attacked the king of Orissa, M okund Rao, the last of his race, at the same time, Soliman, the large of Rengal, sent his general Kala paliar with a large body of Alghan cavalry to invade it from the north. The valour of the raju was of little avail he was defeated and slain in 1558 and the venerable Hindoo monarchy, which had never before felt the shock of a Mahomedan invason, was extinguished, and the Afghans parcelled the country out in paygeers among themselves The native inhabitants who had enjoyed the undisturbed exercise of their religion from time immemorial. were now to taste the bitterness of persecution. Kala pahar was a brahmin by birth, but had embraced the religion of the Prophet to obtain the hand of a princess of Gour, and now became a relentless oppressor of his former creed So terrific did he appear to the Hindoos, that it was popularly reported that the legs and arms of the idols dropped off at the sound of his awful kettle drum He made every effort to root out Hindooism he persecuted the priests, and confiscated the reli gious endowments which had accumulated during twenty generations of devout monarchs he pulled down the temples. and crected mosques with the materials, and seized the image of Jugunnath, which he committed to the flames on the banks of the Gances The attention of Akbar was drawn to Bengal

Tv7

Pengal, 15 & even while he was engaged in the subjugation of Guzerat Under the successor of Shere Shah, the Afghan governor had assumed independence, and four kings reigned in Bengal during a period of thirty years, of whom the most distinguished was Solman, the conqueror of Oriesa. In the height of his prosperity, he had the waldom to acknowledge the supremacy of the emperor But his successor, Drood Klim, a debauchee and a coward who a cended the throne in 107%, finding himself at the head of an army which was estimated, by oriental exaggeration, at 110 000 infantry, 40,000 cavalry, and 20 000 guns of all sizes, considered Jumself a match for Albar, and while he was engaged in Guzerat attacked and captured a fort above Ghazeepore Akbar mmediately ordered a large army to proceed to the con quest of Bengal. Ghazeepore, which was strongly grunsoned submitted after a brave res stance and the lung fled to Ornssa, where he made goe bold stand for his throne. He was de furted, but allowed to retain Orissa, as a feudatory of Delhi The year after on the withdrawal of a portion of the imperial

It was a short time previous to the invasion Destruction of Gour ch 1560 of Bengal by Akbar, that the ancient city of Gour was depopulated and abundoned, after having existed more than twenty centuries. It was admirably situated on the confines of Bengal and Behar for the government of both these provinces, it had been the capital of a hundred kings, by whom it was successively adorned with the most superb edifices It extended along the banks of the Ganges, and was defended from the encroachments of the liver by a stone embankment, not less than fifteen miles in length. This magnificent city, the seat of wealth and luxury, was suddenly humbled to the dust by some postilential disease, which has never been satisfactorily explained. The establishments of government were transferred, in the first instance, to Tondah, and then to Raumahal

Compared of The next important event in the conjugate Cashmere 1357 was the conquest of Cashmere, by his brother in The next important event in the reign of Aklar law, the rap of Jeypore, when the Mahomedan ling of that province was enrolled among the nobles of the court, and this lovely valley, the paradise of Asia became the summer retreat of the emperors of Della The attempt which Akbur was required to make, soon after, to curb the highland tribes around the plum of Peshawur, proved 12r more arduous These wild mountaineers, of whom the Eusufzics and the Khyberees were the most considerable and most turbulent, had been for ages the plague of every successive ruler of the province. It was their hereditary belief that the fastnesses of the mountains had been bestowed on them by the Creator. to enable them to levy contributions on the industry of the plains Every form of conciliation and coercion had been employed in vain to restrain their inroads On this occasion Abbar sent an army against them, under the joint command of his foster brother, and his great personal friend and favourite, the Hindoo raja Beerbuil Their troops were decoyed into the defines and cut off, and, to the infinite regret of the emperor, Beerbull was among the slain. So complete was the disgrace, that according to the historian of this reign, of 40,000 horse and foot, who entered the hills, scarcely an individual escaped Such wholesale destruction would appear incredible if we had not witnessed an example of it in the same scene in our own day. The task of subjugating them was then committed to the raps Toder Mull and Man Sing, who established military posts in the hills, and cut off the supplies of the mountaineers from the plains, and thus imposed some restraint on their violence They became, however, as troublesome a century after, in the days of Aurungzebe, as they had been in the time of Al bar, and it is only since the establishment of British authority at Peshawur, that they have felt themselves in the presence of a master

Akbar, having no other war on his hands, pro C nquest of ceeded to annex the kingdom of Sinde to his S'nde an I Can dahar 1591--94 dominions, and soon after reconquered the province of Candahar Thus after a series of conflicts, which extended over a period of twenty five years, Akbar saw himself the undisputed monarch of all his hereditary territories beyond the Indus, and of all the principalities which had ever belonged to the grown of Delha, north of the Nerbudda, and it only remained to extend his authority over the Deccan bucf notice of the events in that reg on, during the sixteenth century, will form a suitable introduction to the Mogul expe dition, on which Alber pow entered

His ory of the Decean n he 16th cen urv

It has been stated in a previous chapter that on the decline of the Bahminy kingdom the governors of the different provinces threw off their allegi ance and that at the period of Baber's invasion, five separate kingdoms had been established in the Deccan, at Beejapore Ahmednugur Golconda, Beder, and Berar Of these Beder the most ms gmficant was gradually absorbed by its more powerful neighbours Berar was scarcely of The kingdon s more weight in the politics of the Deccan, and was of Beder and which was sometimes called Telingria, as comprising the districts of that extinct Hindoo morrichy, was consolidated England by Koolee Kootub Shah, who claimed homage on the ground of being hyeally descended from

Be ar extinguished about the year 1572 by the Nizam Shahee ruler of Alimednugur. The kingdom of Golconda.

Japhet, the son of Noah ILs reign extended over sixty years, daring which he was employed, as he delighted to say, "im spreading the banners of the Fa th, and reducing the infidels from the borders of Teliagana to Masulipatim and Rajahmundry" Year after year he took the field against the Hindoos, reducing their villages to ashes, and turning their temples into mosques Though the langs of Golconda mixed freely in the intrigues of the two other princes of the Deccan, and were always ready to enter the lists against them when plunder or territory was to be gained, their attention was more particularly directed to the subjugation of the Hindoo distincts lying between the eastern border of their langdom and the Bay of Bengal

The two states of Beerspore and of Ahmed Eurodome of nugur, called the Adıl Shahec, and the Nızam Deciarore and Shahee, which bordered on each other, were mees santly engaged in mutual hostility. Within the circle of those kingdoms was included the region inhabited by the Mahrattas, the rise and importance of whose power is to be attributed primarily to the perpetual warfare in which these royal families were involved. As early as 1499, we find a body of 5,000 Mahrattas enlisted in the service of one of them, and throughout the sixteenth century, their armies were strengthened by Mahratta contingents, consisting of five, ten, and sometimes even twenty thousand troops. Not a low of the Mahratta families, which subsequently rose to distinct on, traced the origin of their dignity to these appointments There was as yet no bond of national units among them, and their mercenary weapons were sold to the highest bidder, even though their own countymen might be in the opposite rulks. As the object of the kings of the Deccap was to inflict the createst amount of havoc on their opponents, the aid of men who were bandits by birth and profession, must have been invaluable To the south of the three Deccan Lingdoms,

116

The Hindon lay the territories of the great Hindoo monarch kingdom of Beeluynugur of Beejuynugur, who exercised authority, more or less complete, over all the Hindoo chiefs in the south The kings of this race had incessantly wiged war with the powerful Bahminy sovereigns and on the extinction of their power, were always engaged either in alliance or in war with some one of the Deccan kings, the ally of one year being frequently the foe of the next The revenues of Beenuynugur, which were said to have been enriched by the commerce of sixty scaports, on both coasts enabled the king to maintain a force with which no other single state was able to cope Ram Raja the reigning monarch in the middle of the sixteenth century, had recently wrested several districts from Becjapore, he had also overrun Tehngana, blockaded the capital, an l constrained the king to make large concessions His growing power gave just alarm to the Mahomedan kings of Beejapore, Ahmednugur, Golconda, and Beder, and they resolved to suspend their mutual jealousies and form a general con federacy to extinguish it. This was nothing less than a conflict for supremacy between the Hindoo and the Mahomdan powers in the Deccan Ram Raja, then seventy years or age, called up to his aid all his Hindoo feudatories as far as

Ceylon, and was enabled to assemble an army, cons sting, on the most moderate computation, of 70 000 horse 90 000 foot, 9 000 elephants, and 1,000 pieces of cannon The great an l decisive battle was fought on the 25th of January. Batt a of Tall cotta 25 Jan. 1.6), at Tellicotta about twenty miles north of

Beejuynugur, and terminated in the total defeat and capture of the rap, and the shughter according to the Mah medan historian of 100 000 u fi lels. The aged raja was put to death in collisiond, and I is lead was preserved as a trophy at Registers and annually exhibited to the people for two hundred years on the annuversary of his death. The capital was plundered of all its treasures, and gradually sunk to insignificance The power of the Hindoos in the Deccan was irretrievably broken, but the confederate monarchs were prevented from following up their victory by mutual dissensions, and the brother of the raja was thus enabled to save some portion of the territory, and to establish his court at Penconda The capital was subsequently transferred to Chundergree, which has been rendered memorable in the history of British India as the town where, seventy four years after the battle of Telhcotta, the descendant of the raja granted the English the first acre of land they ever possessed in India, and on which they erected the town of Madias

During the sixteenth century, the Portuguese The Portum race during the 18th made little effort to extend their conquests into the interior of the country. They were content with being masters of the sea, from which they swept all the ficets of India and Arabia, and with the monopoly of the commerce between Europe and Inda There are, therefore, few events of any consequence in their history. It was about thirty years after they had landed at Calicut that they determined to obtain possession of the harbour of Din at all

Bahadoor Shah, the king of Guzerat, was driven from his throne by Humayoon, and took refuge at Diu, where the Portuguese, after their repulse, had succeeded in forming an establishment There he entered into a treaty with them, granting permission to erect a fortress in return for a contingent of 50 European officers and 450 soldiers, with whose aid he was enabled to reconquer his kingdom on the departure of Mumayoon The disputes which arose regarding this fortification, and the tragic event in which they ended, have been already narrated. The fortress was completed in 1538, and contributed to strengthen the power of the Portuguese, who had now become the terror of the eastern seas through the superiority of their naval equipments It became, therefore, the interest of all the Mihomedan powers in Asia to extirpate them, and the Grand Seigneur at Constantinople entered into a combination with the king of Guzerat to accomplish this object. The Turkish admiral sailed from Suez to Diu, with a force of 7,000 men and a superb train of artillery A body of 20,000 men co-operated with them from Guzerat Sylverra, the Portuguese Commander, had only a force of 600 men, but defended himself with such gallantiy, that the serge is one of the most remarkable transactions in the history of the Portuguese When, at length, forty alone of the gains a remained fit for duty, and there was no prospect before them but an unconditional surrender, the Mahomedane, exhausted by this long and fautless seige, drew off their troops, and Dru was saved

Considered

The greatest event of this century, however, was the seege of Gor, in 1570

The large of an it elvent was the seege of Gor, in 1570

The large of the control of Almedungur formed a coalition with the Z monn of Calcut to expel the Portugents of attack the settlements contiguous to his dominions

All Add came down upon Gor, with a force of 100,000 minantry, 35,000 cavalry, and 350 pieces of camon, Don Luis, the governor, was able only to muster 1,700 men, meltiding

the monks, but he obliged the king to ruise the seige with ignominy, after ten months had been wasted, and 12,000 of his troops slau Mortiza Nizam Shah of Almedaugur, descended the ghants with an army scarcely less numerous, composed of natives of Turkey, Persia, Khorasan, and Ethio qua, and atticked the port of Choul, in the neighbourhood of Bombay, but he was repulsed at all points, and 3,000 of his troops penshed in the assault. The Zunorin, at the same time, laid seige to the port of Chule, but it was rescaed from danger by the timely arrival of reinforcements from Goa The Portuguece, having thus repulsed the most formidable attempt made on their settlements since they became a power in India, constrained the discomfitted princes to sue for perce, and retained their supremery in the lindon occur, and on the coasts of India to the close of the century, when they had to encounter the rivalry of the new power introduced by the Dutch, to which they were obliged eventually to succumb

Abbar, having consolidated his empire to the ones been, north of the Aerbudda, resolved to conquer the 1898 Docean There can be little doubt that this movement was dictated simply by the 'lisst of territorial aggrandsement,' and that it is open to all the censure which English historians have bestowed on it. Yet aggression had been the normal principle of every government, since the Mahomedina 'turned their face to India, in the year 1900, perhaps even long before that period, and if the enterprise of Abbar had been crowned with success, it would doubtless have been an incomparable benefit to India have been an incomparable benefit to India

It is difficult to unagine a more deplorable condition than that of the unhappy provinces of the Deccan during the whole of the sixteenth century. The large seem to have had no occupation but war. Scarcely a year passed in which the ullages were not subjected to rapine, and the fair fruits of industry blasted by their wanton irruptions. No govern ment, however tyrannead, could have inducted anything like the wretchedness occasioned by these unclassing devastations.

CHAND SI

120

So mestimable is the blessing conferred by a strong government in India, in putting down intestine war, and giving repose and confidence to the people, that it appears mere affectation to inquire into the origin of its rights, which, in time cases out of ten, will be found to be as valid as those of the power it subverts

Akbar enters On the death of Boorhan Nizam Shah, the king the Ahmed of Ahmednugur, in 1595, four rival factions arose nugur state in the state, the most powerful of which called in the aid of the Moguls Akbar, who had long been watching an opportunity of interfering in the affairs of the Deccan, readily accepted the overture and lost no time in sending forward two armies But before they could reach the capital, another revolution had placed the power of the state in the hands of Chand Sultana She was a princess of Ahmednugur, who had been bestowed in marriage in 1564 on Ali Adil Shah of Beejapore, to bind him to the alliance then formed by the Mahomedan kings against the raja of Beejuynugur On his death she returned to her native country, and now assumed the regency on behalf of her nephew, Bahadoor Nizam Shah This celebrated woman, the favourite heroine The celebrated

Chand Sultana, of the Deccan, the subject of a hundred ballads, 1595 determined to defend the city to the last extremity, and persuaded the rival factions to merge their differences in a combined effort against the common foe The Moguls had constructed three mines, two of which she countermined, the third blew up, carrying away a portion of the wall, and many of her principal officers prepared to desert the defence The Sultana flew to the spot in full armour, with a veil over her countenance, and a drawn sword in her hand, and recalled the troops to a sense of their duty Combustibles of every description were thrown into the breach, and so heavy a fire was directed against it, that the besiegers were constrained to retire During the night she superintended in person the repairs of the wall It is a popular and favourite tradition. that when the shot was exhausted, she loaded the guns with copper, then with silver, and then with gold, and did not pause till she had begun to fire away her jewels. The allies whom she had importuned to aid her, were now approaching, the Mogul camp began to be strutened for provisions, and prince Morad, the son of Akbar, who commanded the army, offered to retire on obtaining the cession of the the Mogda, province of Berar Chand, having little confidence in the fidelity of her troops or of her, allies, was constrained to accede to these terms

Within a year of this convention, the lines of pat, Jan. 1897 Beejapore, Ahmednugur, and Golconda formed an alliance to drive the Moguls back across the Nerbudda, and brought an army of 60,000 men into the field. An action was fought at Soneput which lasted two days, without any decisive result, though both parties claimed the victory Dissensions at length brole-out among the officers of the Mogul army, and Akbar, who had resided for fourteen years in the countries bordering on the Indus felt the necessity of proceeding in person to the Deccan On reaching Boorhanproce he sent an army to lay seige again to Ahmedaugur The government of the Sultana which she had maintained with great difficulty, was now distracted by factions, and feel ng the city to be incapable of defence, she endeavoured to make the best terms in her power with the Moguls to make the best terms in her power with the Moguls. The prulace, inflighed by her enemies rushed into her chamber and put her to death. But they soon had reason to deplore their ingrittide. The Mogul army stormed and plundered the city, groing no quarter to the defenders, and the young kung and his family were sent as state prisoners to Gwalior. The fall of the criptal did not, however, ensure the summan of the kingdom, and it was not incorporated with the Mogul dominions till thirty seven years after this period. Soof after, Akbar deprine this result has up of Can lesh, of all author it, and that kingdom was reanneed to the Mogul empire.

medan rulers of India Few princes ever exhibited greater military genius or personal courage He never fought a battle which he did not win, or besieged a town which he did not take, yet he had no passion for war, and as soon as he had turned the tide of victory by his skill and energy, he was happy to leave his generals to complete the work, and to hasten back to the more agreeable labours of the cabinet The glories of his reign rest not so much on the extent of his conquests, though achieved by his personal trient, as on the admirable institutions by which his empire was consolidated The superiority of his civil administration was owing not to his own genius alone, but also to the able statesmen whom, like Queen Elizabeth, he had the wisdom to collect around him In the early period of his career he was a devout His religious follower of the Prophet, and was at one time bunt views and h.s. toleration. on a pilgrimage to his tomb, the aspiration of every Mahomedan, but about the twenty fifth year of his reign he began to entertain sentiments incompatible with fidelity to He professed to reject all prophets, priests, and ceremonies, and to take simple reason as the guide of his thoughts and the rule of his actions The first article of his creed was "There is no God but one, and Akbar is his prophet ' Whether he ever intended to become the founder of a new creed may admit of controversy, but all his measures tended to discourage the religion of the Prophet He changed the cra of the Heura, he restrained the study of Arabic and of Mahomedan theology, and he wounded the dearest prejudices of the faithful by proscribing the board. Nothing but the accordancy of his character, and his dazzling success in war and in peace, could have preserved the throne amidst the disand in peace, could have preserved the turnue amoust the dis-contents produced among his own chiefs by these beterodox measures. Among a people with whom persecution was considered the most sacred of duties, Akbui adopted the prin-ciple not only of religious teleration but, what has been found a more difficult task even in the most enlightened Christian communities, of religious equality. He formed the magnanimous resolution of resting the strength of his throne on the attachment of all his subjects, whether they belonged to the established religion of the state or not. He disarmed the hostility and secured the loyalty of the Hindoos by allowing them to share the highest civil offices and military communds with the Mahomedans, and thus placed himself a century ahead of the Stuarts in England. He abolished the odious jezzia, or capitation tax, he issued an edict permitting Hindoo widows to marry, he discouraged suffices to the full extent of his jowen, and he abolished the practice of reducing captives to elavery

Under the supervision of the great financier H a revenue n.forms. of the age, the rais Toder Mull. Akbar radically remodelled the revenue system of the empire He caused all the lands to be measured according to a uniform standard, and with the most perfect instruments procurable. He divided them, according to their character and fertility, into three classes and fixed the demand of the state generally at onc third the annual produce, and then commuted it to a money ayment. He abolished all arbitrary cesses, and made the settlement for ten years and with the cultivators themselves, to the exclusion of all middlemen. It is questionable there fore whether, during his reign, there were any zemindars in India at all, and whether those who afterwards assumed their rerogatives were, at this period, and for more than a century after, anything beyond mere officials employed in collecting the public dues

The whole empire was divided upto fifteen provances, or soubalis — Cabul, bevond the Indus, Lahore, Modina, Della, Agra, Oude, Albhabad, Ajmere, Guzerat, Malwe, Behar, and Bengal, and south of the virbuda's Can lesh, Berna, and Almealungur Each pro mee was placed under a soobadar, who was entrusted with full powers evil an I military, and assisted by a deway, or mose ter of finance, who, though nominated by the emperor, was accountable to the soobadar. The military duties of each province were entrusted to a fouzdar, who also commanded the police force, and was responsible for the peace of the country Civil law was administered by a Mahomedan chief justice, assisted by local judges, and the decisions were invariably in accordance with the precepts of Mahomedan law

τ]

The military system of Akbar was the least Insulitary
The military system of Albar was the least extension of the perfect of all his arrangements, and his extraordinary success is to be attributed more to the weakness of his opponents than to the superiority of his own He perpetuated the great military error of paying the commanders for their soldiers by the head, which created an irresistible temptation to make false musters, and to fill the ranks with ragamuffins The same organization which pervaded the various offices of state was carried into all the establishments of his court, down to the department of the frmts and the flowers, the perfumery, the kitchen, and the kennel, which were regulated to the minutest details under the personal directions of the emperor Every establishment was maintained upon a scale of imperial magnificence. He never had fewer than 12,000 horses and 5,000 elephants in his own stables, independently of those required for hawking, and bunting, and war During his progress through the provinces his camp was a great moving city, and the eye was dazzled by the sight of the royal tents surmounted with gilt cupolas. and enriched with the most gorgeous ornaments.

CHAPTER V.

JULIANCEER AND SHAH JEHAN, 1605-1658

Johanner asseven and adopted the title of Jehangeer, the conqueror of the world. The great empire to which he succeeded was in a state of profound tranquillity, and there was no spirt of insubordantion among the military or civil chiefs. Its proceedings on his accession served not only to calm the fears which his provious misconduct had excited, but even to win him the esteem of his subjects. He confirmed his father's ministers in their posts, abolished some vexations taxes and, though strongly addicted to wine himself, prohibited the use of it, and endeavoured to control the indulgence in opium. He replaced the Mahomedan creed on the coin, and main fested a more superstituous attention to the precepts of the Prophet than his father had done. At the same time he courted popularity by affording easy access to the complaints of his people. But a subject of disquietide soon arose.

126

Present on or his on Khusro had become the object of his on Khusro had become the object of his on Khusro had become the object of his object. Of his on Khusro had become the object of his object of his object of his one of the leading courtiers, and the youth now field to the

some of the leading courtiers, and the youth now fied to the Funjab, where he collected a body of 10 000 men. He was promptly pursued and captured, and the empeore exhibited the brutality of his nature by causing seven hundred of his adherents to be impaled alive, while the wretched Khusro was carried along the line to witness their agony

Pare age and marriare of case of the conduct of Jehangeer for excicen the conduct of Jehangeer for excicen Teherun, but her father, having been reduced to poverty, determined to follow the prevailing current of emigration, and proceed to India to repair his fortunes. During the journey, his wrie gave birth to a daughter under the most calamitous circumstances, though they were subsequently embellished with all the romance of poetry when she became the Queen of the Bast and was in a gostion to reward the pens of poets. A merchant who happened to be travelling on the same route afforded assistance to the family in their exigency, and, on reaching the capital took the father into his own employ, and, perceiving his abilities, introduced him to the service of Akbar, in which he gradually rose to emmence His daughter. Noor Jehan received all the accomplishments of education which the capital of India could afford, and grew up into a woman of the most exquisite beauty In the harem of Akbar, which she occasionally visited with her mother, she attracted the attention of the prince Selim, who became deerly ena moured of her But she had been already betrothed to a Turkoman of the poblest descent, who had acquired the title of Shere Afgun, from having killed a hon singlehanded. He had serve I with renown in the wars of Persia and India, and was distinguished no less by his g gantic strength than ly his personal valour. Al bar refused to annul the nuptral engagement even in favour of his own son, and, in the hope that absence would allay the passion of the prince appointed Shere to a paygeer in the remote district of Burdwan

٣1

MATCHAGE OF NOOR JEHAN

But Jehangeer had no sooner mounted the throne than he determined to remove every ob stacle to the gratification of his wishes, and Shere perished in a scuille which was not believed to be accidental His lovely widow was conveyed to Delhi when Jehangeer offered to share his throne with her, but she rejected the offer with disdun and was consigned to the neglect of the barem, where she had le sure for reflection and repentance.

of the emperor's disposition, and constrained him to appear sober at the durbar, however he might indemnify himself for this restraint in the evening. Her taste imparted grace to the splendour of the court, at the same time that she curtained its extravagance. Her brother, Asof Khun, was raised to a post of high dignity, and her father, who was placed at the head of affairs, proyed to be one of the ablest of viziers.

128

Ma & Amber and U s state of Ahmedaugur, as previously stated, was captured by Ahbar, on the murder of Chand Sultana in 1600, and the roy al family was consigned to the fortress of Gwalior , but the kingdom was not subdued, though Akbar designated it as one of the soobalis of his empire Malik Amber, the chief of the Abyssmian nobles of the court, assumed the control of public affairs, and placed a kinsman of the late king on the throne He attacked the Mogul forces with vigour, and erected the national standard on what had been regarded the impregnable rock of Dowlutabad, he founded a new camtal at the foot of it, at Kirkee, and adorned it with many splendid buildings Malik Amber stands foremost in the history of the Deccan as a statesman of sur passing genius, who maintained the sinking fortunes of the Ahmednugur dynasty for twenty years with the greatest energy Planting himself on the borders of the Deccan, he continued to repel the encroachments of the Moguls, and repeatedly drove their armies back to Boorhangore He availed himself to so great an extent of the services of the Mahiatta chieftains, that he may be said to have cradled their power, more especially was it under his banner that Shabjee the father of bevajee laid the foundation of his greatness With a natural genus for war, he was still more remarkable for the assiduty with which he cultivate I the arts of peace and it is the revenue settlement he brought to perfection which has given listing celebrity to his name He was the Toder Mull of the Deccan

Jehanneer attacks Amber 1612 Jehangeer resolved to retacks Amber 1612 Jehangeer resolved to recover the footing which the Moguls hall lost v 1

Abdoolla Khan, were sent against Malik Amber But he avoided a general engagement, while his light Deceaned horse hovered on the flanks and rear of his enemy, cut off his communications and supplies, and harassed him by night and by day so mexorably as to oblige him to sound a retreatwhich the Abyssinian soon converted into a disgraceful fight The second army met the Ahmedaugur troops in the flush of victory, and wisely retraced its steps across the Norhadda These disappointments were balanced by success

Codypore 1614 against Oodypore It has been already stated that Oody Sing, the feeble rana of Chittore, the founder of the town of Oodypore, was obliged by the generals of Akbar to seek refuge in the hills. He was succeeded by his son, Pertap Sing, who is still idolized by his countrymen for the heroism with which he repelled the attacks of the Moguls. and preserved the cerm of national independence in his wild fastnesses Although the Rajpoot rajas of Jeypore and Marwar were ranged agrunst him, he succeeded in recovering the greater portion of his hereditary dominions before the established. He landed at Surat, and proceeded by slow journeys to the court, then held at Ajmere, where he was received with greater distinction than had been conferred on any foreign envoy Of the result of his embassy we shall have occasion to speak hereafter, here it may be sufficient to state, that he was fascinated by the oriental magnificence of the court, which so completely eclipsed the tinsel pomp of that of his own master He was dazzled with the profusion of gold and newels on every side, and, not least with those which adorned the foreheads of the royal elephants But he perceived little comfort among the subjects of the empire, who were ground down by the extortions of the public servants of every grade The emperor dispensed justice duly in person, but he retired in the evening to his curs, which ho never left while there was any reason left in him. He was maudhn and easy, and his courtiers were universally corrupt and unprincipled Military discipline had decayed after the death of Akbar, and the only good soldiers in the army were the Rajpoots and the Afghans There was a large influx of Furopeans at the capital, and so greatly was Christianity encouraged, that one of the emperor s nephews had embraced it, and the Emperor himself had an image of Christ and the Virgin in his reserv The attention of Jehangeer was now called to Second cam

Vigin in his reserve timeer and an image of Christ and the Vigin in his reserve the Moule of Jehangeer was now called to willow as a like state of affurs in the Decean and he marched his Amber down to Mandoo to superintend rise war, which he entrusted to the command of Sfiah Jehun, at the same time declaring him the heir of the throne. The prosperity of Malik Amber had created a feeling of envy at the Ahmed nugur court, and aliented many of his confederates. Un the approach of Shah Jehan, he was still further weakened by the defection of the king of Begiptere, and was obliged to enter into negotintions, and ecide the fortress of Ahmel nugur, together with all the conquests he had in made from the Mogulis. But within four years he renewed the war, and succeeded in driving the impurial forces across the Tajtee.

REBELLION OF SHARL JEHAN

v 1

Shah Jehan was again selected by his father to command the arms . but he accepted the charge only on condition that his brother Khusro should accompany him Before he reached the province of Malwa, Mahk Amber had crossed the Ner-1 idds and burned down the suburbs of Mandoo Rut success still attended the arms of Shah Jehan He contrived to cor rupt the principal Mahratta chiefs in the army of Malik Amber-some of them by the most extravagant offers-and that general, deserted by his own officers, suffered a defeat, and was obliged to purchase peace in 1621, by a large sacrifice of treasure and territory

132

Malik Amber and the kings of Beejapore and Golconda refused hun any assistance, his own troops began to desert, and he was obliged to retreat to Telingana On reaching Masulipatam he marched along the coast to Bengal, took possession of that province and of Behar, and advanced to Allahabad Mohabet, who was lying at Boorhanpore, on hearing of his sudden appearance on the Ganges, hastened to encounter hun, his raw levies were speedily dispersed, and he fled a second time to the Deccan Malik Amber was now at issue with the emperor, and made common cuise with his fugitive son, and they advanced together to the siege of that city But Mohabet pursued the prince with such energy that he was fain to seek reconciliation with his father, which, however, was not granted but on the hard condition of surrendering all his forts, and giving two of his sons as hostages

A new scene now opens in this eventful drama Noor Jehan Mohabet, the greatest subject of the empire, and Mohabet, 16"5 the prime favourite of the emperor, had acquired additional importance by his brilliant success, but as he manifested no disposition to second Noor Jehan's views regarding the succession of Shariar, her confidence was capricionaly converted into hatred, and she resolved on his Jehangeer was at this time on his way to Cabul charge of embezzlement during his recent campaign was trumped up against Mohabet, and he was summoned to the court to answer it He came, but with a body of 5,000 Rajpoots who were devoted to his service. He had recently betrotled his daughter to a young noble without obtaining the usual consent of the emperor Jehangeer, on herring of the circumstance, ordered the youth into his presence, and in a fit of brutal rage directed him to be stripped naked and whipped with thorns in the presentes of the court, and confiscated all When Mohabet approached the royal encamp ment he was refused admission. He could not fail to perceive that his run was determined on, and he resolved to strike crossed the Hydaspes, and Jehangeer, who had not recovered from the debauch of the previous night, remained behind with a slender guard. Mohabet proceeded to the emperor's tent and seized his person Jehanover was frantic at this indignity, but seeing himself absolutely in the power of his general, was persuaded to mount an elephant, with his coblet and his cun-bearer, and proceed to Mobabet's tent.

v٦

MOHATET SEIZES THE EMPEROR.

series of slifful manœuvres contrived graduilly to turn the tables on him, he saw that his position was becoming daily more inscence, and made offers for a reconciliation. Now John condoned his revolt on condition that he should proceed in jurisuit of her other enemy, Shah Jehan making his sull mission to the emperor, had field to Sinde intending to seek an asylum in Persia, but he was still a for midable obstacle to her views. But when his ji rospects were at the lowest eight her began to brighten. More better were at the lowest eight her began to brighten. More better data for throng through the influence of Noor Jahan resolved to assist the efforts of Shah Jehan, and instead of proceeding to attack him, joined him with the troops yet remaining under his standard.

The empress on hearing of this defection ordered him to be hunte I through the empire, and set a price on his head But her power was at once annihilated by the death of Jehangeer, whose constitution was completely Death and characte of exhausted by a life of indulgence, and who ex Je angeer pired at Lahore on the 28th of October, 1627, in the sixtieth year of his age. He was contemporary with James the First of England Not only was their reign of the same duration, but there was a remarkable accordance in their characters. They were both equally weak and contemptible, both the slaves of favourites and of drink, and by a singular coincidence, they bot I launched a royal decree against the use of tobacco, then recently introduced into England and India, and, in both cases, with the same degree of encoses of success

On the death of Jehangeer Asof Khan the brother of Noor Jehan, and one of the chief ministers determined to support the claims of Shah Jehan on the same ground which had influenced the decision of Mohabet He despatched a messenger to summon him from the Decean and at the same time placed the empress dowager under restraint. Her influence expired with the death of her husband, and she retired from the world with an number of twenty five Incs of rupees a-year, and passed the remaining years of her life in cherishing his memory. Shariar, who was at Lahore, was attacked and defeated by Asof Khan. and put to death by order of Shah Jehan That prince lost no time in coming up from the Deccan, in company with Mohabet Khan, on whom, as well as on Azof magnificence Khun, the instruments of his elevation, he be-stowed the highest dignities. He was proclaimed emperor, at Agra, early in 1628, and began his reign by indulging that passion for magnificence in which he eclipsed all his predecessors The anniversary of his accession was commemorated by a dis play of incredible extravagance A suite of tents was manufactured of the finest Cashmere shawls, which, in the figu rative language of his biographer, it required two months to In conformity with the usage of the ancient Hindoo parent in community with the design of the ancient finance sovereigns he was weighed against silver, and gold, and jowels, which were then lavished among the courtiers. Ve-sels filled with gems were waved over his head and emptied on the floor for a general scrumble. The expense of this festival was computed at a crore and a half of rupces The first eight years of the reign of Shah Jehan were occupied with military operations in the dome in the Joseph Laboration Deccan Thirty years had now clysed since Abbre croseed the Nerbuddy, and overran the kingdom of Ahmednugur, on which occasion he added to his titles that of king of the Deccan The genus of Malk Amber Ind, however, and go the become a few generous artists amore from newerer, succeeded in restoring the independence of the langtom, to-getter with much of its ancent power, but he had recently deed, at the age of eighty. The lung of Beeppore, Ibrahim Adi Shah, renowned for the grandeur of his edifices, had ded about the same time, bequeathing a full treasury and an army of 200 000 men to his successor The king of Golconda was engaged in extending his authority over his Hindoo neigh-lours to the cast and south Of all the acquisitions mide by Aklar south of the \crbsdda, there remained to the crown of Delhi only the eastern half of Candesh, and the adjoining por tion of Berar

17

War in the Deccan occas oned by the revolt of K! an Jehan Lodi, 16°9—1637

186

The war in the Deccan on which Shah Jehan now entered, and which continued for eight years, was occasioned by the revolt of Jehan Lodi. He was an Afghan of ignoble birth, but great ability and arrogance, who had raised himself to eminence in the Mogul army, and obtained the office of governor of the Deccan, from which post he was removed to Malwa under the new reign He was invited to court, and treated apparently with great distinction, but, having imbibed a suspicion that the emperor, to whom he was personally odious, had a design on his life, he quitted the capital abruptly with the troops which had accompanied him. He was immediately pursued, and overtaken on the banks of the Chumbul, and it was only with extreme difficulty that he was able to clude pursuit and reach the Deccan, but, having once reached it, he was joined by numerous adherents, and supported by the king of Ahmednugur The emperor considered the revolt so serious as to order three armies, each consisting of 50,000 men, into the field, and even to proceed to the Decem in person Jehan Lodi was driven out of Ahmednugur by the Mogul force, and sought the aid of the king of Beempore, which was peremptorily refused him His friend, Shahice, the Mahratta chieftain, considering his cause desperate, al andoned it, and joined the Moguls, for which act of treachery he was rewarded with a title of nobility Meanwhile his allies, the thmednugur troops, were defeated by the Mogula at Dowhitabad, and Jehan Lods, overwhelmed by the defection of his friends and the discomfiture of his allies, fled northward, in the hope of reaching Afghanistan, and rousing his country. men, but he was brought to bay on the borders of Bundletund, and, after performing produces of valour with the small Sody of 400 men who still adhered to his fallen fortunes, was struck dead by a Ramoot, and his head sent as an acceptable offering to Shah Jehan,

187

The war with Ahmednugur did not, however, Termination of cease with the cause of it. The king, Mortiza the war in the Nizam, had fallen out with his minister. Futch Khan, the a n and successor of Malik Amber, and thrown hum into prison , but, having experienced nothing but mortifi cation in his struggle with the Moguls, released him, and restored him to power The Aby siman rewarded the kind ness of his master by causing him and his adherents to be assassinated, and, having placed an infanton the vacant throne, offered his submission to the emperor Meanwhile, the king of Becapore, alarmed at the progress of the Mogul arms determined to make common cause with Ahmednugur, and thus brought down the imperial armies on his own territories would be wearsome to go into a detail of all the intrigues, the treachery, and the vicissitudes which form the history of this period of five years. Suffice it to record that the war with Becapore was conducted with varied fortunes, that the king baffled the Mogul generals by creating a desert for twenty miles around his capital and depriving their armies of food too late to afford him assistance, it is supposed that they formed a settlement in the neighbourhood of the great port of Satzong, at a place called Gohn, or Gola, the granary, afterwards cor rupted to Hooghly, where they continued to flourish for a hun died years Towards the close of the century they appear to have formed another and larger settlement at Chittagong, where Gonzales is said to have held the district around it in subjection with the help of a thousand Europeans, two thousand natives, and eighty ships So formidable was his power, that the Mogul viceroy made Dacca the seat of his government, in With the com order more effectually to check his progress mand of the only two ports of the Gangetic valley, the power of the Portuguese in Bengal during the sixteenth century must have been an object of no little alarm to the Mogul nuthorities

At Hooghly they had fortified their factory, and Hooghly obtained the complete control of the commerce of the river, and the prosperity of Satgong began to wane under this rivalry At the time when Shah Jehan, flying before Mohabet, in 1624, advanced from Masulipatam to Bengal, he besought the Portuguese chief at Hooghly, Michael Rodrigues, to assist him with some guns and artillerymen, but, as the governor had no confidence in the success of that rash enterprise, the request was refused Six years afterwards when Shah Jehan had become emperor, a representation was made by the soobadar of Bengal that some European idolaters, wlo had been allowed to establish a factory in Bengal, had crected a fort and mounted it with cannon, and grown insolent and oppressive Shah Jehan had not forgotten the repulse he received from Rodrigues at Hooghly in his adversity, and curtly replied, "Let the idolaters be immediately expelled from my dominions"

Capture of Story 1 is and finding that it could not be carried by storm undermined the defences. The great bastion was blown up, the Mogula rushed with fury into the breach, and slaughtired more than a thousand Portuguese Of three hundred vessels then in the river, it is stated that only three escaped. More than four thousand were made prisoners, the priests were forwarded to Delhi, and the most beautiful of the women re served for the royal seragho, the churches and mages were demolished By this blow, the power of the Portuguese in Reneal was pretrievably broken, and no vestime now remains of their former influence, save the few vocables they contributed to the language of the country, and the old church at Bandel, within sight of Hooghly, erected two centuries and a half ago The Mogul vicercy directed that it should thenceforth be made the royal port of Bengal, all the public records and offices were removed to it from Satgong, and that city, which may be traced back to the days of the Cæsars, sunk into a little paper making hamlet

٣1

Acquation of In the year 1667 the emperor was branch of Candahar, which by the unexpected recovery of Candahar, which In the year 1667 the emperor was gladdened 11 Merdan had been so often lost and graned by the family of Raber Ali Merdan, the covernor under the Persians, was driven into rebellion by the tyrannical proceedings of his sovereign, and made over the town and territory to the Moguis, after which he sought a refuge at the court of Dellu He was received, as may well be supposed, with great honour by Shah Jehan, and subsequently employed in many military, expeditions beyond the Indus But his fame has been perpetuated in Judia by the great public works which he executed, and more especially by the canal, near Dellu, distinguished by his name, which has proved an incal culable blessing to the country it irrigates

The military operations which were undertaken Mr ar erea. The initially operations when were the individual boundary of the lindus, can scarcely be said to belong leaker-16147 to the history of India. The emperors of the house of Baber retained the same ardent interest in all the political movements of the region from which they sprung, as the first and second George took in the fortunes of Hanover India was, therefore, draned of men and money for the conquest or defence of those distant, and, as compared with India, unprofitable possessions The son of the Uzbek ruler of Balkh had revolted against his father, the government was thrown into confusion and Shah Jehan, who had enjoye ! seven years of repose, could not resist the temptation of again prosecuting the dormant rights of his family on that remote province Ali Merdan was sent across the Indus with a large army, and ravaged Budukshan, but was constrained, by the severity of the winter, to retreat Raja Jugut Sing was then sent to conduct the war with 14,000 Rappoots, and never did the chivalry of that race of warriors, and their sympathy with a tolerant and just government, shine more conspicuously than in this expedition Regardless of Hindoo prejudices, they crossed the Indus, and surmounted the Hindoo Kosh, and encountered the fiery valour of the Uzbeks in that frozen region To be near the scene of operations, Shah Jehan took up his residence at Cabul His third son, Aurung zebe was also employed in these operations, and at first gained a great victory, but was soon after obliged to retire upon Balkh, and then to make a most disastrous retreat to Cabul, with the loss of a great portion of his army The emperor was at length induced calmly to weigh the policy of con tinuing an expensive war in that distant quarter, and he had the moral courage to relinquish the enterprize

The Fersas
The Fersas
The repose gained by abandoning Bulkh was, recalculation, bowever, of short duration Shah Abbas, the sand three effort king of Persas, having now attained his majority, recoverit, 1648
came down on Candahar and retook it, after a research king of Persa, having now attained his majority, research kils came down on Candahar and retook it, after a siege of two months Shah Jehan was resolved to recover it, and the following year Aurungzebe invested it for four months, but without success Two years after, the vizier as well as the prince again invested the town with a larger force but it e attempt was a second time unsuccessful, and Aurungzebe was sent as viceroy to the Deccan A third army was despitched in 1603, under prince Dara, the closes son of the emperor, who was irrythent to achieve success in an expedition in which his ambitious bruffler had been twice foiled, but, though it set out at the precise moment which the royal astrologic had pronounced to be most anispicous, it was equally destined to disappointment. Thus terminated the third and last attempt of the Mogils to recover Candahar, of which they had held but a precanous possession since the days of Baber. The failure was followed by two years of repose, when Shah Jehan completed the revenue settlement in the Doccain, on which he had laboured for twenty years, and introduced the financial system of Toder Mull.

v 1

The year 1655 marks the commencement of an Peneral of the important sence of events,-the renewal of the Deccan 1855. war in the Deccan, which continued for fifty years to consume the resources of the Mogul empire, and served to hasten its downfall During the twenty years of peace which followed the treaty with the king of Beejapore, in 1636, that prince had given his attention to the construction of those splendid palaces, mansaleums, and masques which dis tinguished his reign, and to the conquest of the petty orincipablies in the Carnatic which had sprung out of the runs of the Hindoo kingdom of Beejuyanugur The tribute which he exacted at the same time from the king of Golconda, had been paid with punctuality, and that prince had manifested every disposition to cultivate the friend-hip of the emperor There was no cause of difference with these rulers, and Shah Jehan appeared to be completely satisfied with the rela-tion they maintained with his throne But in 1603, Aurungzebe, after his second repulse from Candahar, was appointed to the Diccan, and determined to obtain an indemnity for his disappointment in the subjugation of the two kingdoms of in the service of a diamond merchant who took him to Gol conda, and bequeathed his basiness to him. The enterprizing youth embathed in maritime trade, and amissed prodigious wealth and cline to be held in high estimation for his talents and probitly in every Mahomedan court in Asia. He entered the royal service of Golconda, and gradually rose to the supreme direction of affairs. He led an army to the south, and extended the authority of the king over the chiefs who yet enjoyed independence, and it was while absent on this expedition that his son, Mahomed Amin, by some say posed act of disrespect, incurred the displeasure of his sovere grammar.

Bee impore and Golconda.

Meer Joseph Solitation that consideration for his son which he considered his own services entitle I A tack of 6. 1 him to, but meeting with a refusal, made an appeal to Aurungzebe which that prince was but too happy to take up Under his influence, Shah Jehan was induced to send a hrughty missive to Abdoolla to grant redress to the youth which the king answered Lypheing him in confinement, and confiscating his father sestates. An order was then sent to turungzebe from Dellu to enforce compliance by the sword, and he entered upon the execution of it with that craft which was the prominent feature of his character through life He assembled a large army, giving out that he was about to proceed to Bengal to celebrate the marriage of h s son with the daughter of his brother the vicercy of that province He advanced towards Hyderabid with the most friendly professions, and the unsuspecting Abdoolla menared to welcome him with a magnificent entertainment, when he found himself treacherously assailed by the Mogul army and constrained to seek refuge in the fortress of Gol conda A large portion of Hyderabad was burnt down, and the city subjected to ind scriminate plunder, by which the booty which Aurungzebe had destined to himself, tell to his soldiers The king of Golconda, reduced to extremity by the sudden and unprovoked assault, was constrained to submit to the harsh terms imposed by Aurungzebe, that he should bestow his daughter on one of his sons, with a rich dowry, and pry up a crore of rupees, as the first instalment of an annual tribute. Shah Jehan, who has a conscience, remitted one fifth of this sum, and, inviting Meer Joseph to Delhi, invested him with the office of vizier.

Having thus reduced Colconda to submission, Aton.t on Dec happer 165 Aurungzebe resolved to attack Beejapore, and he had not long to want for a pretext Mahomed Adul Shah ded in 16a6, and bequeathed the kingdom to his son, a fouth of nineteen, who mounted the throne without paying that homige which the emperor pretended to consider due to him It was, therefore, given out that the youth was illegitimate, and that it belonged to the emperor to nominate a successor The war which prose on this unwarrantable claim was perhaps, a more wanton and hemous aggre sion than any to be found in the darkest annals of India Joomla, as commander in chief, and Aurungzebe, as his lieu tenant, suddenly invaded the territories of Beejapore The Mahratta chieftains in the service of that state, nobly rallied round the throne, but the abruptness of the irruption, ren dered it impossible to collect a sufficient force—a large portion of the army being absent in the Carnatic-or to resort to the usual means of defence The forts of Beder and Koolburga were captured, the country was laid waste with fire and sword, and the capital was invested. The king made the sword, and the capital was invested. The king made the most humble Eupplications, and offered to purchase peace by the payment of a crore of rupees, or any sacuffice the pruce might demand, but every offer was sternly rejected. The extinction of the dynasty appeared inevitable, when an event occurred in the north, which gave it a respite of thirty years. News came posting down to the Decean that the emperor was at the point of death, and that the contest for the empire had begun turungzeberras of liged to hasten to the capital to look after his own interests, and the siege of Reciapore was raised.

The four sons of bhah Jehan

144

Shah Jehan had four sons, Dara, the eldest had been declared his successor, and admitted to Aurungzebesd rances to De hi, a considerable share of the government

great talents for command, and an air of regal dignity, he was frank and brave, but haughty and rash Sociali, the second son, the vicercy of Bengal, had been accustomed to civil and military command from his youth but was greatly addicted to pleasure The third, Aurungzebe, was the most able and ambitious, as well as the most subtle and astute member of the family, while Morad, the youngest, though bold and generous, was little more than a mere sot Data was a free thinker of Akber's school, Aurungzebe was a bigoted Mahomedan, and contrived to rally the orthodox around him by stigmatizing his brother as an infidel The claims of primogeniture had always been vague and feeble in the Mogul dynasty, and the power of the sword generally superseded every other right; when, therefore, four princes, each with an army at his command, equally aspired to the throne, a contest became mevitable Soojah was the first in the field, and advanced

Boojat takes ti o field, 1657 # from Bengal towards the capital Morad the victroy of Guzerat, on hearing of his father's illness seized the public treasure, and assumed the title of emperor Aurungzebe, after having extracted a large supply of money from the king of Beerapore, granted him a peace, and advanced with his army to the northtrn boundary of his province. His object was to cajole Morad whom he saluted as emperor, and congratulated on his new dignity, declaring that as for himself his only desire was to renounce the world and proceed on pilgrimage to Mecca after he had liberated his father from the thraldom of the irreligious Dara Morad was simple enough to believe these professions and united his army to that of Aurungzebe on the banks of the Nerbulda, when the two brothers advanced towards the capital

Para defeats

Coo ah Aurung

zel e is v cto r us, and de

1 s a Shah

S jah, 1659

v 1

Dara prepared to meet both these attacks IIe g despatched raya Jey Sing, of Jeypore, to oppose Soojah, and raja Jesswant Sing to encounter Aurungzebe The selection of two Hindoo gene rals to command the armics which were to deede

the fortunes of the Mogul throne affords strong evidence of the fee'ngs of lovalty which the wase peloty of Al bar had msprind. Just it this juncture Shah Johan was restored to health and icanimed the functions of government but it was too late to quench the cleim uts of strife. The imperial force came up with Soopah at Benaies and he was defeated and obliged to fly to Bengal. The united armies of Aurungzebe and Morad encountered Jessaumt Sing near Oojein, and defeated him and then advanced with 35,000 troops to the neighbourhood of Agia Dara cume out to meet them with a superior force, estimated at 100 000 foot, 20 000 horse, and 80 pieces of cannon. In the fiele and bloody battle which ensued Dira was completely overpowered and fled from the field with a remnant of barely 2000 men. The victorous Aurungzebe entered the capital deposed his father, and assumed the whole power of the empire.

Camerer of Shah Jehan is apily described by his native biographer "Al bar was pre camerer at warrior and as a lawguer "Al bar was pre cameromaparable order, and arrangement of his finances and the increma damnistration of the empire." Though he draw a revenue of thirty croces of rupees annually from his dominion, which did not include the Decean it is generally asserted that the country enjoyed greater prosperity during his reign than under my of his predecessors at has therefore been chiracterised as the golden age of the Mogul dyn sty. This is a significant fact, since the prosperity cunnot be attributed to any emightened policy, or to any enougherent green by the emperor to the pursuits of industry, it was owing simply to that respite from the ravages of war which afforded the resources Shih Jelian was unquestionably the most magni ticent prince of the house of Baber, and perhaps of any other Mahomedan dynasty The pomp of his court, and the cost I ness of all his establishments almost stagger our I clief , but with a treasury which received 600 crores of rupces during twenty years of peace, what might not a monarch do, who had only his own will to consult? In nothing was the splen dour of his taste more manifest than in his buildings It was he who founded the new city of Delhi, in which his castellated palace, with its spacious courts and marble halls, and gilded domes, was the most attractive object. Of that palace the noblest ornament was the far famed peacock throne blazing with emeralds rubies, d amonds, and the most costly stones, the value of which was estimated by a European jeweller and traveller at six crores of rupces To him the country was indebted for the immaculate Tai Mehal the mausoleum of his Queen the pride of India and the admiration of the world But all his establishments were managed with such circum spection, that after defraying the cost of his expeditions beyond the Indus, and maintaining an army of 200 000 horse, he left in his treasury, according to his native historian, a sum not short of twenty four crores of rupces.

CHAPTER VI

AURUNGZEBE 1658-1707

Accession of Aurungaebe has conduct to wards his three brothers, 1658

AURUNGZEBE having thus obtained possession of the capital and the treasury, threw off the mask. He no longer talked of a plagmange to Mecca, but at once assumed all the powers of the treat that the title of himmers the Lond of the government, and took the title of Alumgeer, the Lord of the World His fither was placed in cantivity in his own palace, yet treated with the highest respect, but though he survived this event seven years, his reign ended with his confinement Aurungzebe did not, however, consider himself secure while there was a single relative left, who might disturb his tranquility As he had now no further use for Morad, he invited him to an entertainment, and allowed him to drank himself into a state of helplessness, when he was taken up and conveyed to the fortress of Agra Dara after his defeat near Agra, had escaped to the Punjab, where, with the resources of that province and of Afghanistan, he might possibly have made a stand had not Aurungzebe pursued him with promptitude, and obliged him to retreat to Mooltan, and thence to Guzerat The emperor then quitted the pursuit, and hastened to encounter his brother Soonh, who was advancing a second time from Bengal to contest the throne The battle between the brothers was fought near Allahabad, when Aurung zebe was for a time placed in extreme peril, by the treachery of rap Jesswunt Sing, who, in a fit of disappointment, had come to an accommodation with Soorth, and suddenly fell on the emperor's baggage The constancy and valour of Aurung zebe, however, restored the day. At one period of the engage ment his elephant became unmanagable from its wounds and the emperor was on the point of descending from his scat when Meer Joomla, who was by his side, exclumed, "you descend from the throne," on which the legs of the animal were bound, and Aurungzebe continued to animate his troops Ly his presence Soorth was completely defeated, and the emperor returned to Delha leaving his own son Mahomed. and Meer Josmia, to follow up the victory. They pursued the prince to Monghir, and from thence to Rajmahal, which he hal made his cuital and adorned with noble edifices, but his pursuers gave him no respite and hunted him down to Dicca, and then out of Bengal He took refuge, at length, with the King of Armen, Ir whom he and his whole family were harbaron by taurd red .

illness, and the eddice of his greatness, reared by so many crimes, was threatened with sudden destruction. While he lab helpless on his couch the court began to be filled with intrigues. One party espoused the cause of his son, Muazzum, another that of Akbar. Jesswunt Sing was advancing from Jondh pore, and Mohabet from Cabul, to liberate and restore Shah Jihan, but Aurungzube having passed the criss of his discover, caused himself to be propped up in his bed, and summoned the officers of his court to renow their horavge to him. His recovery dissolved the various projects to which his illness had given birth, and Muazzim had to wait forty five years for the crown.

Meer Joomlas A short time previous to the illness of the expedition to Asson, and his emperor, Meer Joomla, who had been appointed viceroy of Bengal, on the expulsion of Soonh, entered upon his unfortunate expedition to Assam, in the hope of adding that kingdom to the Mogul dominions He assem bled a large army and conveyed it up the Berhampooter in loats The capital of the province having been mastered without difficulty, he sent a pompous despatch to the emperor with a report of his success, promising in the following year to plant the Mogul standard in the rich empire of China The to plant the Mogul standard in the rich empire of China The emperor was delighted with the prospect of treading in the footsteps of his renowned ancestor, Jenghis Khan, and ordered large reinforcements to Bengal But a sad reverse was impending. The rains set is with extraordinary violence, the Beiliampooler rose beyon? It is usual level, and the whole of the country was fooded, the supplies of the army were cut off, a pestitence, probably the Assita cholera, broke out in the camp, and Meer Joomla was obliged to retreat in haste and disgreee from the country pursued by the exasperated Assa lives. On his return to Bengal, he expred at Dacca, leaving behind him the reputation of one of the ablest statesmen, and of the greetest generals of that stirring period. Aurungarbet cut firred all his titles on his son, Mahomed Amin, the youth who had been disgreed by the king of Golconda, and in the levies among their own hirdy countrymen, each one commanding his own muster of free lances Jayocers, or lands given for mintaining a body of troops, were frequently granted for their support. Titles were histories conferred upon many of the Mahratta chieftains, but they were generally ancient lindoo appellations. Towards the close of the sixteenth century, seven Mahratta cliefs are enumerated as being ranged under the banner of Beejapore, and two—but of superior importance—under that of Ahmednugur. It was the wars which raged for a century in the Deccan, between the Kistia and the Taplec, that first taught the Mahrattas their own importance, and paved the way for their future free dominance, but it was chiefly under Malik. Amber that they made the most rapid strides towards political influence. A community of village clerks and husbandmen was thus transformed into a nation of warriors, and only required the appearance of some master spirit to raise it to empire. That spirit appeared in Sevagee.

Mallogeo Bhonslay, an active captain of horse,

Malloge Ihonslay, an active captain it is understanded by the hard search was employed about the year 1000 in the service search of the hing of Ahmednugur IIIs wife, who had long been childless, offered her prayers and vows at the Mahomedia heima of Shah Selfer, and the child to whom she gave birth was named Shahpe in grutitude to the easit. He was born in 1591, and his father sought an alliance in the principal form of 1591, and his father sought an alliance in the principal form of the arbitrers of India, the national historians endeavined to trace the family of Valloge from the raiss of Chittore, who claimed to be the lineal descendants of the great design here, Ilymu, but at this period Jadow Hao spurned the alliance of so I lebetan a family. Soon after Malloge su idealy carrento possession of a large treasure, acquired, doubtless, in the Mahratta mode, and he of tancel from the venal court of Ahmediaugur the 13 greers of Poons, Sopa, and several other nations are sail to have been graced by the presence of the lang of Ahmednugur. On the death of his father, in 1620, Shuhpee succeeded to the jay geer, and augmented his military force and importance, and entered into a close connection with Mahk Amber. Nine years after, we find him espousing the cause of Jehan Lodi, but when the fortunes of that Afghan chief appeared to be on the wane, he deserted his cause and joined the Moguls, for which he was rewarded with the nominal honour of a commander of 5,000, and the substantial boon of a confirmation of his jaygeer. But Shahjee was speedly disguisted with the shuffling poley of the Mogul commanders, and agun changed sides

Pasch a prince to the transport of Ahmedon the capture of the young prince of Ahmedon the transport of Ahmedon nagur, in 1634, he considered himself strong
of Ahmedon nagur, in 1634, he considered himself strong of Ahmedon the country of the lawful her of Nizam Shah For three years he appears to have maintained a desultory warfare with the imperial generals, but was at length driven out of the country and obliged to seek refuge in the court of Becapare, where his ability was known and appreciated; and he was entrusted with the command of an expedition to the Carnatic. His zerd and success were rewarded with the grant of extensive payeers in Bangdore, and the neighbouring districts where he conceived the design of establishing an independent Hindoo sovereignty, and resigned the petty payeer of Poons to his son Sevajee

Betyle, the founder of the Maintatta emptre, bledfead of the Maintatta emptre, bledfead of the Maintatta emptre, bledfead of the Maintatta emptre, was born in 1627, and was sent, three years after, error to reade with his mother at Poona, under the treclage of Dadayee managed the estate with the structest economy as well as fidelity, and remitted the revenue with punctuality to Shahpee, but continued to reserve a small sum annually at Poona He switched over his youthful charge with assiduity, and is said to have given him an education suited to his station and prospects Sevajee, however, was never able to read or write, but he was skilled in the use of

. bow and the sword, and the weapons employed in the hils, he was expert in all manly exercises, and, like his countrymen, an accomplished horseman. His tutor did not neglect his religious instruction, and Sevalee grew up a devout and rigid Hindoo, with a profound veneration for brilimins, and a hearty hatred of Mahomedans His imagin ation was excited in youth by the perusal of the great epic poems of India, and he longed to emulate the exploits which nic immortalized in them At the age of sixteen he formed un association with youths of wild and lawless habits, and engaged in bunting or marauding expeditions, which made hum familiar with all the paths and defiles of the tract which became the cradle of his power Having trained the inhabitants of his native glens-the Mawulkes-to arms and disci Service begins pline, he began his career of ambition at the age his career proposed function, by capturing Torna, a built fort of tung loral, very difficult access. In the succeeding year he erected a new fortress, to which he give the name of Rugur These proceedings did not fail to excite observation at Beepapore, and letters were sent to Shahpee in the Carnatic calling him to account for the doings of his son, but he replied that he had not been consulted by him, though he could not doubt that they were intended to improve the jay geer At the same time he remonstrated with Didysee on the conduct of Sevajee, and the tutor failed not to reprannel his pupil, but, finding that he was bent on pursuing a course which appeared likely to injure the prospects of the fam it, fell a into to anxiety. As his end approached he is sail to have called Sevice to his death bed, and urged him to continue the career on which he had entered, to protect training, kine, and cultivators, and preserve the temples of the gods from sudation

and in the course of two years extended his authority over thirty miles of territory He attracked a convoy of treasure proceeding to Beejapore, and carried off three lies of prigodia to his eyry in the mountains. In quiel succession it was announced that he had captured seven other forts and had moreover surprised the governor of Callian, and extorted the surrender of all his fortresses The audacity of these pro ceedings rused the indignation of the Beeppore court and Shahice who managed all their recent acquisitions in the Carnatic, was held responsible for the proceedings of his son, though he pleaded, and with truth, that he had long ceased to possess any rifluence over his movements. Shahjee was treacherously seized by the Mahratta chief of Ghorepuray and brought a prisoner to the capital, where he was threat ened with a cruel death To procure his release, Sevajee then only twenty two memorialized the emperor, and offered to enter the imperial service and it is not improbable that Shahjee owed his life to the representations made by the court of Delhi He was however detained for four years as a hostage until the increasing disorders in the Carnatic conquests con strained the king of Beejapore to restore the government of them to him During his father's detention Sevajee dis creetly suspended his incursions but on hearing of his release resumed his predatory and ambitious course and by an act of base treachery mufdered the brother chieftains of Jaolee and appropriated their lands to himself

While Aurungzebe was engaged in the writting with Beejapore, in 1657, Sevagee entered into correspondence with him and professed humself a devoted servant of the throne of Delhi. He was this enabled to obtain a confirmation of the territory he had wrested from Beejapore and was encouraged to fartler encroachments. But no sooner had Aurungzebe marched towards Delhi than Sevagee begun to ravage the Mogul territories and carried off three lacs of pagedas from the town of Jononer. For the more distant enterprizes to which he aspired, he felt the necessity of an efficient body of horse, and he now begin to male the most vigorous efforts to organize that light cavalry, which subsequently lecame the scourge of Hindostan About the same time he enlisted his first body of Mahomedan troops, taking into his pay 700 Pitans who had been unwisely discharged from the service of Becapere, but he took the precaution of placing them under the command of a Mahratta officer The success of Aurungzebe s efforts to obtain the throne gave just alarm to Sevaice. who sent an envoy to Delhi to express his deep regret for what had occurred, and his attachment to the throne, and le had the effrontery to offer to protect the imperial territories during the emperor's absence, asking only for the transfer of the Concan to himself Aurungzebe, conceiving that the security of the Mogul districts would be promoted by giving encouragement to Service, consented to his The Concan bafint evere taking possession of the Concan He lost no hashs trees, the passession of the content of the formal time in sending an army to occupy the province but his troops were defeated with great slaughter, and he expenenced the first reverse he had sustained since the beginning of his career

After have a constraint of Begapore was at length rouse, was insulated. It is accessed the danger arising from the incessed from the constraint of the accessed from the constraint of the accessed from the constraint of the accessed from the constraint of the const mountuin defiles, placed a select body of Mahrattas in ambuscade Having performed his religious devotions with great fervour, he advanced to the interview with all humility, and while in the act of embracing Afzul Khan, plunged a concaled weapon in his bowels, and despatched him with lus dagger. The troops of the murdered general, thus taken by surprise, were surrounded and defeated, and the whole of the cump equipage, including 4,000 horses, fell to the victor. The success of this stratagem, notwithstanding the atrocity of the deed, served to exalt the character of Sevajce in the opinion of his co-intrymen, and greatly improved his position. In 10 followed up this victory by the capture of numerous forts, and plundered the country up to the very gates of Beenapore.

The king now took the field in person, and suc-Fevalee is reconciled to the ceeded in regaining many of the forts and much king of Pecia of the territory he had lost The war was protore 1682. tracted with various success for two years, but the balance of benefit remained with the Mahratta A reconciliation was soon after effected between the parties, chiefly, as historians conjecture, through the mediation of Shahiee, who had paid his son a visit. It will be remembered, that in 1619, Shahjee was betrayed to the king of Beepapore by the Mahratta chief, Ghorepuray On that occasion, he wrote to Sevarce -"If you are my son, you must punish Basee Ghorepuray of Moodhole" Thirteen years had clapsed since that act of treachery, but Sava ee had not forgotten his father's injunction During the war with Beejapore, he learned that his enemy had proceeded to Moodhole with a slender escort, and he resolved not to lose this opportunity of avenging his family wrongs. He arpeared suddenly before the town, captured and burned it to the ground, and with one exception, slaughtered the whole of the family and adherents of Ghorepury, even to the infants in the womb. Shahjee was delighted on hearing of this vindictive exploit, and resolved to visit his son, whom he had not seen for twenty years alle was received with the highest distinction, and Sevajee attended him on foot for twelve miles. Shalipee congratulated him on the progress he had made towards the establishment of a Hindoo power, and encouraged him to persevere. On his return, he was entrusted with presents for the king of Beejapore, which served as a peace offering and led to a treaty. At this period, Seva pee, in his thirty fifth year, was in possession of

YI.

Extent of Sera jee, in his thirty fifth year, was in possession of preparations the whole coast of the Concan, from Callain to is 16a. Coa, extending about four degrees of latitude, and or the ghauts, from the Beema to the Wurda about 130 mile in leneth and 100 in breadth. His army which consisted of 50 000 foot and 7,000 horse was out of all proportion to the territory under his authority, but he was ince santly engaged 11 war, and he made war support itself by exactions.

Sevajee being now at peace with Beejapore, let Shaata Khan Sharts Khan loo e his plundering hordes on the Mogul territo ries, in utter violation of his engagements with Aurungzebe, and swept the country up to the suburbs of Aurungabad. The emperor appointed Shusta Khan his own maternal micle, and the nephew of Noor Jehan accrev of the Decean with orders to chastise this aggression and carry the war into the Mahratta domain Shaista captured Poons, and took up his residence in the very hou c where Sevaice had passed his childhood and Sevajee conceived the design of as a smating him in his bed 1 Mahratta foot soldier in the unverral service whom he had gamed got up a marriage proce son, which Sevagee paned in di guise and was enabled to enter the town with thirty of his I llowers in the suite After mehtfall, when the town was dark and ou et he procheded unperceived to the palace with every corner of which he was famil ar and suddenly fell on its inmates. The viceros awaking suddenly from sleep, escaped with the loss only of a inger, but his son, and most of his guards were cut down Sevagee, foiled in his chief object the destruction of the victory, retired before the troops of ald be a sembled and was seen returning to his encapy ment annual a blaze of torches.

158

This daring exploit, so congenial with the national character, was regarded with greater exultation by his own countrymen than his most splendid victories. Shursta Khrin was soon after recalled and sent to govern Bengal, and the Rajpoot raja Jesswunt Sing, the governor of Guzerat, who was left in command was little disposed to push matters to extremtly against men of his own faith

The operations of Sevajec, which had hitherto been limited to the neighbourhood of the ghauts, were now extended to a more remote and a bolder enterprize The city of Surit, a hundred and fifty miles distant from Poona, was at that period the greatest emporium of the western coast of India The annual importation of gold and silver from Arabia and Persia alone amounted to fifty lacs of rupecs, and two families in the town were accounted the richest mercantile houses in the world. It was, moreover, considered pre eminently the port of the Mogul empire, where all the devout Mahomedans, official and private, from the various provinces which yielded a revenue of thirty millions a year, embarked on pilgrimage for Mecca Sevarce is said to have visited the city in disguise, and during four days marked the houses of the most opulent for plunder with him 4,000 of his newly raised horse, he appeared suddenly before the town, which was ill fortified, and having deliberately plundered it for six days, returned leisurely to his capital at Raigur He met with no resistance except from the European factories Sir George Oxenden, the English cluef at Surat, defended the property of his masters, and also that of the natives, with such valour and success as to obtain the applause of Aurunezebe, as well as a perpetual exemption from some of the duties exected of other merchants the first occasion on which English and native troops came into contact with each other, and the result filled both Mahomedans and Hindoos with astonishment On his return from this ex-Death of Shah pedition, Sevaree heard of the death of ha father, at the age of seventy, and immediately assumed the 1sq. 1501.

Γw

title of rain, and began to strike the coin in his own name. At the period of his death Shahjee was in possession not at the period of his death charge was in possession not pair of the extensive pyrgeers around Bangulore which he had received from the ruja of Beejapore but of Arnee, Porto Avro, and Tanjore, in the south of the pennisula, which he had subjugated, and, in consideration of his fidelity to the state, had been permitted to retain den Barelore, complete unless he could command the sea as well as the land, had been engaged for some time in creating a fleet While his troops were employed in ravaging creating there 'S much is troops were complete in insight, the Mogul ternfores up to the walls of Ahmedungur, his clips were capturing Mogul ressels bound to Mecca, and exacting heavy ransons from the rich pilgrims embarked on them In February, 1665, he secretly drew a large fleet together at Malwan, consisting of eighty eight vessels, of which three were large ships of three masts and the re mander of from 50 to 150 tons burden. Having embarked with 4 000 troops, he proceeded to Barcelore a hundred and thirty miles south of Goo, which had long been considered one of the greatest marks of commerce on the western one of the grevess marks of commerce on the western coast, but has now disappeared even from the map. There he obtained immense booty and returned to his capital before it was known that he had embarked. This was the first expe dition at sea which he headed in person, it was also his last, umon a sea which he heaten herson, I was man in suffered for a volent gule drove his yeasel down the bay he suffered senonely from sea sickness, and his spiritual guide assured him that this was the mode in which his tutelar deity had manifested his displeasure at such a heterodox enterprise

Sevace, plan

manutested ms displeasure at such a neutronoc enterprise for the state of the stat

than at the assumption of the title of raja, the plunder of Surat. the comage of money, or any other aggression of Sevalee On this occasion Sevajce was attacked with the greatest impetuosity by the imperial generals, and felt his inchility to cope with an umy so greatly superior to his own He was, therefore, induced to call a council of his officers, at which he appeared the most mesolute of all, and it was resolved to enter into negotiations with the enemy They ended in the Convention of Poorunder, by which he engaged to iestore all the forts and districts he had taken from the Moguls, with the exception of twelve, which, with the territory around them, yillding a revenue of a lac of pagodas a year, he was to hold as a layguer dependent on the emperor But he dexterously inserted a clause which would have exerbalanced all his losses In heu of some pretended claums on the old Nizam Shahee state, he asled for certain assignments which he termed the chout, and the sur lesh mookhee on some of the Beejapore dis-tricts above the ghauts, the charge of collecting which he offered to tal c on himself. This is the first montion in history of the celebrated claim of the chout, or fourth of the revenue, which the Mahrattas subsequently marched over India to enforce So anxious was Sevuce to get the principle of these exactions admitted, that he offered a peshoush or donative of forty lacs of pagodas-nearly a million sterling—to be paid by annul instalments, and engaged to maintain an additional body of troops for the emperors ser In the letter which Aurungzele wrote to lim on the occasion be confirmed all the stipulations of the convention, but made no allusion to the chout or sur-desh mooklee, t robably because he did not comprehend the insidious tendency or even the import of these barbarous terms. But Sevaice chose to consider the silence of the emperor as an acl nowledgment or these clams, which from this time forward, it became the para-

n ount of ject of Mahratta policy to extend to every province. Service, having now entered the enterors service, Serates stracks joined the imperial army with 2,000 horsemen and 8,000 foot, and marched against Beempore w site Delbi. The Mahratta horse in the service of Beerapore, -a 1666 portion of which was commanded by Vencasee, the halfbrother of Service,—greatly distinguished themselves in this war, nor were the Mahrattas in the service of the emperor less conspicuous for their valour. Aurungzehe wrote a complimentary letter to Sevajee, inviting him to court, and he proceeded to Delhi with an escort of 1,500 horse and foot The emperor had now an opportunity of converting a formidable foe into a zealous adherent, but, either he had not the tact of conculation, or his pride rendered him blind to his interests Sevajee found himself treated with wanton insult, and presented at the durbar in company with nobles of the third rank. He left the imperial presence burning with indignation, and asked leave to return to his jaygeer. But the object of the emperor was to detain him and his residence was belenguered and all his movements watched, he contrived however to clude the vigilance of the emperor's guards, and escaped in a basket, and reached his own dominions in the disguise of a pilgrim in December, 1666 The rap Jesswunt Sing, and prince Muazzim

h w rat on were sent to command in the Deccan,—the Maho-Fevaler a civil medan fond of pleasure, and the Hindoo of money Seray c gratified the avarice of the raja with large gifts, and through him was enabled to make his peace with the emperor, who made an addition to his territories and conferred on him the title of rate. The Mahratta manuscripts ascribe this unexpected lenity on the part of the emperor to the design he therished of again decoying Sevajee into his power About the same time a treaty was concluded between the king of Beeppore and Aurungzebe, by which the former ceded the Beejapore and Auringzeee, by which the former extend the fort and territory of Solapore, yielding near two lacs of lagodas a year Sevajee now prepared to enforce his clim of chout on the districts of Beejapore, alluded to in the Convention of Poorundes, but the vizier of that state i irchised exemption by agreeing to an annual payment of three lies of rupces. Some agreement of a similar character appuras to have been entered into by the minister of Golconds for a sum of five lies of rupces. Having now a senson of greater leasure than he had hitherto enjoyed, Senajee employed the years 1668 and 1669 in revising and completing the internal arrangements of his government. There is nothing which gives us so high an opinion of his genius as the spirit of wallow.

which pervades his carl polity. It is impossible to be idd without the greatest admiration, a rough solder, who was unable to read or write, and who had for twenty years I cen simply a captian of bandith; establishing a system of admirast tration so admirably adapted to the consolidation of a great kingdom. His multary organization, which was distinguished for its vigorous discipline and its night economy, was equally suited to the object of creating a new and predominant power in Hindostan This was also the most prosperous period of Prosperity of Armergebeand Aurunggebes long reign. The empire was at his year, e. peace. His father Shah Jehan had recently sunk peace His father Shah Jehan had recently sunk into the grave, and there was no longer any dread of projects for his restoration. The emperor was held in the highest respect throughout the Mahomedan world, and received tokens of deference from the most distant sovereigns. The Scheriff of Mecca, the Khan of the Uzbeks, the king of Abys sinia, and even the sovereign of Persia, had sent complimen tary embassies to Delhi But the restless ambition of Aurung zebe again kindled the flames of war, which continued to rage without the intermission of a single year through the period of thirty seven years to which his reign was prolonged Finding it impossible to invegle Sevajee into his power, and knowing that his general Jesswunt Sing was motive under the influence of Mahratti, gold, he issued the most peremptory orders to seize him and some of his principal officers threaten ing vengeance for neglect. Sevajee, seen g hostilities mevit able, prepared for the conflict with the most determined resoIntion He opened the campaign by the capture of Singurb, a fortress deemed maccessible to an enemy, but which his general Maloosray escaladed with his mountaineers, the Ma wulkers, and fell in the moment of victory Sevage rewarded every private soldier with a silver bangle. Poorunder, a fortress of equal strength and importance, was also recovered With an army of 14,000 men he again plundered Surat, and again the factors of the East India Company covered them selves with renown by the gallantry of their defence. One of Sevuce's generals overran the province of Candesh, and for the first time levied the chout from a Mogul district. The most remarkable circumstance attending this distant invasion was the exaction of a written document from the village authorities, in which they engaged to pay one fourth of the government dues to Sevajee, or to his officera Sevajee, on is part, engaged to furnish them with regular receipts, which would exempt them from future pillage and ensure them protection

The great naval arsenal of the Beejapore state was the port of Juperah, and it was under the Magala 15 command of an Abyssuman admiral. It had long been the carnest desire of Servjee to obtain possession of this important harbour, and he had besieged it annually for nine years, but, owing to the inferiority of his artiflery, had invariably failed. In 1670 he again brought his whole force against it, but was again baffed. He endearoured to seduce the admiral from his allegrance by large offers, but three of the subordinate officers of the port, who were personally obnoxious to Service and detested the very name of Muhratta imprisone the admiral, and placed both the arsenal and the feet under the protection of the Moguls. Rhs was a severe blow to the projects of Service, as it strengthened has most formable and inveterate foes, the Sedees of Jinperch, by enabling them to obtain reinforcements from Smat, which rendered the port impregnable. Meanwhile, the emperor, dissistated with the pactivity of liss son Muzzain, sent Mohabet Khan, with an army of 40,000 men to the Deccan. Sevajee had always avoided a pitched battle with the superior forces of the Moguls, but on this occasion he boldly resolved to try conclusions with them in the open field. The result was the most complete victory the Mahrattas had ever guined, and no triling increase of their confidence. The attention of the emperor was soon after drawn to Afghamstan, and the war with Sevajee languished.

aurungsete in The turbulent Khyberces and Eusufzies, the ties khyber 1972, perpetual enemics of peace and order, had again broken out in open revolt. They had defeated Mahomed Amin, the son of Meer Joomla, and destroyed his army in the passes, -subsequently rendered memorable by the annihilation of a British army,-and obliged him to redeem his women and children by a heavy ransom The emperor determined et first to undertake the subjugation of these incorngible high-landers in person, and marched with a large force as far as Hussun Abdal, but soon after transferred the command of the expedition, in which little glory was to be reaped, to his The war occupied two years, and the emperor was at length happy to terminate it by accepting the nominal submission of the tribes On his return to Dellin he found Revelt of the lumself suddenly involved in a most formidable Sutnaramees difficulty arising from a most insignificant cause A sect of Hindoo devotees, called Sutnaramees, living in the town of Namoul, agriculturalists by profession but always bearing arms, were thrown into a state of extreme excitement by the violence of a police soldier. The emeute gradually grew into a revolt. The devotees assembled by thousands, and being joined by some disaffected zemindars and men of note, defeated a body of troops sent regards them. The provinces of Agra and of Ajmere were thrown into commonton, and the imperial army surunk from collision with enthusiasts, who were said to possess the magical power of resisting bullets. The tact of Aurungzebe at length succeeded in putting down a rebellion which chreatened his coppire. He 1.17

caused texts of the Koran to be written on slips of paper and attached to his standard, and his troops, now believing themselves protected from the spells of the enemy, obtained an easy victory

Aurungrebs persecute the but for the disastrous results which sprung from Humboos, 1877 it Akbar and his two successors had adopted the liberal and sound policy of reconciling the Hindoos to the Mogul power by granting them religious liberty and equality During a century of toleration the Raipoot chiefs became the firmest supporters of the Mogul throne But the bigotted turunggebe entertained a strong religious hatred of all mildels, though from motives of policy, he still continued to employ Papoot troops, as a counterpoise to his Mahomedan sold ers and had formed two family alliances with Paipoot princesses From the beginning of his reign, all his mea sures had breathed a spirit of intolerance, but it was not till his feelings were embittered by the wint of success in the Klyber, and the revolt of the Hindoo devotees, that he entered upon a systematic persecution of the Hindoos He issued an edict forbidding all governors any longer to receive Hindoos into the juli c service and ordered the je. 7a, or poll tax, to be impo-cd on all who were not Mahomedans. The tax was odous, not so much from its pressure, being less than three quar ters per cent, on income, as from its being a ' tax on infide!" and a token of religious dependation. On going to pravers at the mosque after this edict, his way was blocked up by many of whom were trampled to death by his horses and clephants After this example if seventy, the tax was sull aly submitted to So severe was the persecution, that not only were the pagodas destroyed throughout Bengal but in the holy city of Benarts, the sanctuary of Hindooism the most sacred tem les were demolished and mosques erected on the rules, while the images were used as steps for the faithful to trend on

These violent proceedings produced great dis Revolt of the affection in every province, but no open ievolt, except in Rajpootana, and for the Rajpoots the emperor had no sympathy His father and grandfather were, indeed, the off spring of Raipoot princesses, but he himself was of unmixed It was not, however, till after the death of the Tartai blood two celebrated Mahratta generals who had been the prop of the throne, raja Jey Sing, of Jeypore, and raja Jesswunt Sing, of Joudhpore, that Aurungzebe ordered the lezzia to be im posed on his Hindoo subjects Jesswunt Sing had recently died in the imperial service at Cabul, and his widow had re tarned to Dellu with her two sons, on her way to their native country Aurungzebe, anxious to detain the children as hostages, surrounded their encampment with his troops, but Doorga Dass, the faithful servant of the family, extricated them by the most ingenious contrivances from the toils of the emperor, and conveyed them in safety to their own capital The moult thus inflicted on this noble house served to rouse the indignation of the Rajpoots, and, with the exception of the raja of Jeypore, who was bound to the imperial family by many intermarriages, the whole of Rajpootana was in a blaze The emperor lost no time in marching into the country, and constrained the rana of Oodypore to make his submission Favourable terms were granted to him, and a cession of termtory was accepted in heu of the poll tax But soon after be took up arms again and Aurungzebe, exasperated by this re newed opposition to his wishes, summoned troops from every part of India even from the province of Bengal and let them loose on this unhappy country The prince was again driven to tle mountains, the women and children were carried into captivity and the country was consumed by fire and swor 1 The alienation of the Rapports from the Moguls was now complete After this period they were often at peace with Aurungzel o and his successors, and furnished their contingents of troops, and accepted the government of provinces, but that cordial attreh-ment which had made them the bulwarks of the empire for more than a hundred years, was gone. During this war with the Rajpoots, the embarrasements of the emperor were increased by the defection of his son, prince Akbar, who went over to the enemy and advanced suddenly upon the imperial camp with an army of 70 000. Auruagzebe was in imminent danger of being captured with his slender escort, but with his accustomed craft he succeeded in sewing dissensions among the adherents of the prince, who found limited generally deserted, and sought refuge with the Mahrattas, accompanied by the faithful Doorga Dass, and 500 Rajpoots.

To return your to the progress of Sevane. In accompanies by the intuiting bodges bass, and solve happens. To return now to the progress of Sevajee. In 1974, 1811. 1672 he appears to have proceeded on a secret expedition to Golconda, and extracted nine lace of pageodas from the king. While Aurongzebe was employed in Afghanistan, he took advantage of the death of the king of Beejapore and the weakness of a mmonty, to annex the whole of the Concan and the adjoining ghauts, with the exception of the ports held by the English, Portuguese, and Abyssmans He had long struck the com in his own name, and he now determined to proclaim his independence and assume all the ensigns of royalty After many religious solemnities, on the austicious day fixed by the brahming the 6th of June, 1674 auspicious day fixed by the brahmins the 6th of June, 1674 he was enthroned at Pargur, and announced himself as the "ornament of the Khsetryu race, the ford of the royal unbrella,"—the ch true putes of nodern India, the satrop of ancent Persä. In accordance with the custom of oriental Innoces he was weighed against gold, and the money was datributed amongst the brahmins to the amount of 16,000 Jagodras, for, to their chagnin, he was found to weigh only ten stone. The next year he sent an army for the first time across the bettu ide, and ravaged the province of Guzerat. In the year 1676 he undertool one of the most extraordinary expeditions recorded in Indian

In the year 1676 he undertook one of the most extraordinary expeditions recorded in Indian most extraordinary expeditions recorded in Indian thistory, whether we regard the boldness or the success of the dee gn. It was directed to the recovery of the paternal payeeer, he is by just half brother incaper, as a wassal

SELASTE'S EXPEDITION TO THE CARNATIO CHAP 168 of Beeppore, and the extension of his conquests in the south of India Having bribed the Mogul general Khan Johan who directed the operations against him, and obtained an armistice, he made the most judicious provision for the protection of his forts until his return At the close of 1676 he marched to Golconda with a force of 30 000 horse and 40 000 foot and, through the medium of the chief minister, a Mahratta entered into a compact with the sovereign, who engaged on his part to cover Sevajue's territories during his absence, while Sevaree agreed to grant 1 im a moiety of all 1 is con quests, with the exception of the paternal estates. After a month of negotiation and the receipt of a large supply of money and artillery, he sent forward I is army and proceeded himself to pay his devotions at the celebrated shrine of Pur wuttun Naked and covered with ashes he assumed the guise of a Hindoo togee or devotee, and having for nine days com mitted various acts of superstitious folly, which at one time alarmed I is attendants for his sanity, resumed the command of the army, and marched by Madras in the beginning of May Fort after fort was surrendered to hum, but the most extra ordinary exploit of this expedition was the capture of Ginger, the maccessible fortress of the south, "tenable by ten men against any force that could be brought against it " He had now advanced six hundred in les from his own capital, and at Trivadee had an interview with his brother, Vencajce wlo held Tanjore and the other territories bequesthed to him ly These domains he refused to share with Sevajec, who thereupon took forcible possession of the whole of the jaygeer, while his horse ranged through the Carnatic and subjected it to plander wherever the exaction of the clout was resisted, but no portion of either land or money did le allot according to his agreement, to the king of Golconda Mean while the Moguls attacked that state, and Sevaree haven come to an understanding with his Tanjore brother returned to his own dominions and reached Rugur in the middle of 1678, after an absence of cighteen months

Attack of Beejs. A formudable army had been sent by Aurung zebe under Dilere Khan to besiege Beejapore, and the regent, during the Ling's minority, involved the rid of Sevuce, who stipulated as the price of his assistance for the cession of the Raichore dooab, or country lying between the Toombudra and the Kistna, and the sovereignty of his father s in geer and of the conquests he had made, in the south. To create a diversion in favour of Beejapore, he proceeded north ward, and laid waste all the country between the Beema and the Godyery, and plundered the town of Aurungabad for three days, though the Mogul viceroy was at that time resid ing in it. After his return from this expedition he can tured twenty seven forts, and on the receipt of an express from the regent of Beerapore hastened to the succour of the town the line of march, his son, Sambajee, who had been placed in confinement ly his father for an attempt to violate the wife of a brahmin, made his escape and went over to the Mogul general Sevajee retured to Panalla to devise means for the recovery of the youth and sent lus army to Becapore, which was making a noble defence. The Mal ratta generals cut off all supplies from the enemy's camp, and eventually obliged Dilere Khan to raise the siege. At the same time Supplies returned to his allegiance and was placed under restraint by peath of Serte his father But in the midst of these events all Service's plans of ambition were cut short by his death, which happened at Rairee on the 5th of

April, 1680, in the fifty third year of his age this character Aurungszebe could not conceal the suisfact on he felt on the death of his most formulable enemy During the long struggle which he was constrained to maintain with Sevajee, he affected to deep so his power, and was accustomed to derido him as the mountain rat, but after is death he dif full justice to his character "He was," he said, "a great captun, and the only one who has had the magnanimity to ruse a new kingdom, while I have been endeavouring to destroy the ancient sovereignties of India, my armies have been employed against him for nineteen years, and nevertheless his state has been always mercasing ' This state, at his death, comprised a territory estimated at four hundred miles in length, and a hundred and twenty in breadth, in the north, in the south he was in possession of half the Carnatic, which alone was equal in extent to many kingdoms in India. These large possessions were created by the efforts of his own genus and consolidated by a communion of habits, rch gion, and language, and a common hatred of the Mahomedans Sevajee is one of the greatest characters in the native history of India, greater than Hyder Ali, greater even than Runject Sing who, in after times followed his example, and beginning life as adventurers closed it as mighty sovereigns. He did more than found a kingdom . he laid the foundation of a power, which survived the decay of his own family. His son was a dissolute tyrant, and his grandson a sumpleton, from whose hands the sceptre fell, but the spirit of national enthusiasm which he infused into the Mahrattas, in a few years made them the arbiters of the fate of Judia Sambajee, the eldest son of Sevajee, was Samtajes, 1690 hving in durance at the time of his father s death, in the fortress of Panalla, and a party was formed among the Mahratta chiefs to exclude him from the throne, on the ground of his profligacy But he succeeded in establishing his authority and was acl nowledged the sovereign of the Mahratta : ation, after which he gave loose to the ferocity of his disposition. He caused one of his father's widows as well as those who had opposed his succession to be executed, not spars g Anasce, a brahmin to whom he was under the greatest obligations He had none of the virtues of his fatler except i is courage. His cruelties soon al enated the great generals and statesmen who had assisted in building up the Mal ratta throne; and he rendered I mself an object of general contempt ly his slavish devotion to a favourite of tle name of Kaloosu, a Cunous brahm n His inglorious reian of nine years was mailed only by rash enterprizes, or voluptuous excesses At the beginning of his reign he was induced to renew the siege of the island of Jinjeerah, the great naval arsenal of the Moguls, which his father had attacked year after year in vain. He was obliged to relinquish the enterprize with disgrace, and the Scelee or Abysinian admiral retaliated on him by ravaging the coast, and sluigh terms, him, and eventually by destroying the fleet which admirar retailated on him by tavaging the coast, and staugin tering kine, and eventually by destroying the fleet which have a fest, the competors son, Akbar, who had at first joined the Rappoots, sought refuge at the court of Sam hajee and received a cordial welcome, but, becoming at length diguisted with the follies of that prince, he retired to Parisa.

171

VI.]

Aurungzebe had never relinquished his designs the Precia, and the Deccan Though he had not proceduted them with vigour, his generals had from time to time invaded Beejapore, and he himself had stendily fomented all the internal discords in that state, as well as in Golconda. and encouraged the Mahrattus to assail and plunder them both Having now, in a great measure, subdued the opposition of the Raipoo's, which had been excited solely through his own bigotry, he resolved to bring the whole strength of the empire to bear on the subjugation of the south. It was a war of wanton aggression and, by a righteous retribution, it exhausted the resources and hastened the downfall of the Moral power In the year 1683 he quitted Delbi which he was destined never again to enter, with an army magnificent beyond all former example. The finest cavalry was assembled from the provinces beyond the Indus and within it, and supported by a vast and well equipped infantry Tl e artillery const ted of several hundred pieces served by native gunners. but directed by Europeans as well as an efficient body of suppers and miners A long train of elephants, intended both for war and equipage, and a superb stud of horses accomma med the camp. There was, moreover, a large mena rene of leopards and tigers, and howks and hounds without number.

and all the appliances of field sport. The camp, which resembled a moving city, was supplied with every luxury the age or country could furnish The canvas walls which surrounded the emperor's personal encampment were twelve hundred yards in circumference, and the tents contained halls of audicuce, courts, cabinets, mosques, oratories, and baths adorned with the firest silks and velvets, and cloth of gold There is no record of such extravagant luxury in any modern encampment, and it may be questioned whether it was equalled by the Persian splendour of the army of Xerxes But there can be no question that a thoroughly equipped and well commanded force of 10,000 Europeans-cavalry, infantry, and artillerywould have depersed this host like chaff before the wind I et, amidst all this grandeur, the personal habits and expenses of the emperor were as frugal and nustere as those of a hermit

With this unwieldy army the emperer moved Investor of the down to Boorhanpore, and then to Aurungabad, and, by a strange infatuation, commenced his operations by directing the odious jezzia to be imposed on all the Hindoos of the south Contrary to all military principles lie sent a body of 40,000 horse, under his son, prince Muazzim, to traverse the stupendous ghauts, and enter the maritime province of Concan The prince reached the Concan without opposition, except from the natural obstacles presented by this region of rountains and he plundered and flaid waste every village as he proceeded But the work of destruction reco led on the invaders The resources of the province were destroyed, and by the time the army reached the neighbourhood of Goa it was in a state of starvation The Mahratta cruzers inter cepted the supplies sent from the Mogul ports and their cavalry block ed up the passes The wreck of this fine army, exhausted by hunger and pestilence was at length happy to find shelter under the walls of Ahmednugur, while Sam

bajee, advancing to the north, insulted the emperor by plun dering and burning down the town of Boothaupore

In 1686 Aurungzebe moved his camp to Sola-Beejapore 1686 pore, and sent his son, prince Azim, to attack Beegapore In this, the last year of its national existence, the troops of that state exhibited the most devoted gall utry. They cut off the supplies of the Mogul, intercepted all their communications and reduced the army to a state of extreme peril, from which it was extricated only by the extruordinary exertions of Ghape cood deen, who, after a desperate engagement. succeeded in bringing up a convox of 20 000 bringing bullocks with grain, but the prince could effect nothing the meantime, the king of Golconda, Aboo Hussein formed an all ruce with Sambajee who took advantage of the emblit rassment of the Mogul troops before Beejapore to lay waste the province of Guzerat, and sack the town of Broach On the fulure of the Beerspore expedition the emperor sent his general Khan Jehan, to attack Golconda. Mudhoon Punt, the Mahratta minister of that state, had equipped an army of 70 000 men to meet the invasion. It was commanded by Ibrahim Khan whose superiority in the field was so creat as to place the Mogul commander completely in his power but n stead of pressing his advantages, he treacherou ly went over to the enemy with a large portion of his army Mu dhoons was assess nated in a popular turnult excited by his enemies, and the helpless king sought refuge in the fortress of Golconda. For three days II derabad was subject to plunder, which the Mogul commander could not restrain, and the wealth which Aurungzebe had destined for his own coffers was, to his infinite charrin, shared among the sollers. The hing at length sued for peace, and a treaty was concluded with him on condition of his paying a contribution of two crores of rupees

Aurungzebe was now at liberty to turn his whole strength against Beejapore The walls were of hewn stone six in les in circumference, and the artillery was as superior to that of the Moguls as it had ever been, Auring the determined therefore to blockade the town. Tho garrison began to be straitened for provisions, and its bi we Patan defenders were at length obliged to capitulate The emperor, seated on a portable throne, was carried in triumph. through a breach in the walls, and the young king was con signed to captivity, and died within three years, not without suspicion of violence On the 15th of October, 1686, Becjaj ore was blotted out of the roll of Indian kingdoms, after having enjoyed a career of independence for more than a hundred and fifty years The revenues of the country were estimated in the imperial registry at seven crores of rupees a year, a sum which appears incredible, notwithstanding the fertility of its soil, and the wealth poured into it by maritime commerce Whatever may have been the resources of the kingdom, the Add Shahee dynasty employed them in works of utility or magnificence which had no rival in India No race of princes ever adorned their capital in so brief a period with such magnificent mosques palaces, and tombs. Even at the present day, after nearly two centuries of decay in an Indian climate, the majestic ruins of the city attract the admiration of the traveller, more especially the mausoleum of Mahomed Adil Shali, with its dome of simple grandeur, which, like the dome of St Peter's, fills the eye of the beholder from every quarter of war regainst the unhappy prince, charging him, a follower of the Prophet, with the crime of having employed a brahmin for his minister, and formed an alliance with the infidel Mahritatia. The king though addicted to pleasure, was roused to indignation by the baseness of this treatment, and for seven months defended himself with a heroi in worthly his ancestors. The fort of Golconda was at laugth captured, but only by an act of treatmenty, and the royal house of Kootub Shah became extinct, after a brilliant career of a luindred and seventy years. Vogul generals were sent to take possession of the districts in the Carantic and Telugran, which had been held by the kings of Becapore and Golconda, and the Mahritata, leaving nothing but the principality of Tanjore in the post was not of Vencylee, in whose line it continued till it was absorbed in the British dominions.

Compact of Compact of

[ דיי

The ambition of Aurungzebe was now consummated. He had extended his authority in the Confirmen to south over tracts which had never before acknowledged the sovereignty of the Mahomedans, and for the first time in seven hundred years the whole of India appeared to be bound in allegrance to a single head The year 1688 is the culminating point of Mahomedan rule. The calamities of Aurungzebe commenced as soon as he had reached the summit of success, and the decay of the Mogul empire may be dated from the fall of Golconda. The governments which had maintained order in the Decem had disappeared, no system of equal victor was established in their stead. The spenicions nature of Aurunezebe prevented lum from entrusting any of his generals with a force which they might be tempted by its magnitude to turn against him The two states of Beerapore and Golconda had maintained their authority by an arms of 200 000 men , the Mogularmy, after their subjugation d 1 not exceed $4,000 men The disbended soldiery enlisted under deaffected commanders, or joined the predatory bands of the Mahratias, and each petty chief, in accordance with the presentive habits of the country, "withdraw his neck from the yoke of obedience," whenever it could be done with the prospect of impunity. Aurungzebe was incessantly employed in the siege of forts; there was no energy at the head-quarters of government; there was no redress for the oppression of the governors, while the collectors of the jezzin extorted millions from the wretched Hindoos, and exasperated them against the Mogul conquerors. The Deccan became a scene of boundless confusion, and the last twenty years of the reign of Aurungzebe presented a constant succession of conspiracies and revolts, which consumed the strength of his army and of the empire. Sambajee, infatuated with his favourite and

Math of Same immersed in low pleasures, viewed with indifference the fall of Beejapore and Golconda, though it enabled the Moguls to concentrate their efforts upon the Mahrattas Aurungzebe had taken possession of the open country, and was engaged in besieging the forts, when Sambajee was surprised during a drunken revel, and conveyed as a prisoner to his presence. After the insult offered to the imperial power by the plunder of Boorhanpore and Broach he had sworn that "he would never return to Delhi till he had seen the head of the Mahratta weltering at his feet." The life of Samhajee was offered him on condition that he would turn Musulman. The haughty son of Sevajee replied, "Not if you would give me your daughter in marriage," and at the same time poured a torrent of abuse on the Prophet. Aurungzebo ordered his tongue to be cut out for his blasphemy, and finally put him to death with the most excruciating tortures. Though Sambajee had hved nine years amidst the contempt of his subjects, his tragic end created a strong feeling of pity among them, and gave a keen edge to that spirit of hostility which they cherished towards the Mahomedans The flamitious execution of Sambajee, which has left a stain of the deepest die on the character of Aurungzebe, was not only a crime, but an error. It was the sowing of the dragon's teeth, of which the emperor re yed an abundant harvest before his death.

Esheo, king of the Mahrattis, unable any longer to look to valuate a phood for assistance, and pressed by the whole power of the Mogul empire, were obliged to bend

The valuet of ministers elected Sahoo, the to the storm infant son of Sambajee, though then a captive in the emperors camp, to fill the throne, and appointed his uncle, Ram ram, regent Of the great kingdom founded by Sevaree little remained in the north, and it was determined to make suitable arrangements for preserving the remnant, and to transfer the seat of Mahratta power to the south Ramrain, with twenty five chiefs, made his way in disguise through. the Carnatic amidst a variety of adventures, on which the national historians delight to dwell, and established his court at the fortress of Ginice, which Sevaice conquered in 1676, little dreaming at the time that it was one day to be come the refuge of his family Ram rais, on his arrival, laid aside the character of regent and assumed the ensigns of soveeignty, arranging his court sa the model of that of his father In the following year he sent two of his generals, Suntaice and Dhunnaice, with a force which increased on its progress, to plunder the Mogul terri tones and distract their attention. They extended their ravages to the neighbourhood of Satara, where Ramchunder, who had been entrusted with the Mahratta interests in the north, devised a new plan for damaging the Moguls He conformed the right of levying the clout and sur desh moolee. and of laving waste the districts which refused these exactions, on every Mahratta chief who could bring his retainers uto the field At the same time he created a new demand of al aus dana, or forage money, which was to be the individual remusate of each chieftain Under this new impulse, every mountain and valley poured forth its inhabitants to desolate the tluns, and the Mogul authorities instead of having one great predatory army, directed by a single head and amenable to oblighting on their hands, hal a monster with a hundred heads to deal with

The Mogul army was ill fitted to contend with Compa ison of this new swarm of warriors Its commanders were He M giland Mai rataarnica silken generals compared with the iron chiefs of Akbur's days They vied with each other only in extravagant display, while their persons were protected from danger by wadding and chain armour The spread of luxury had caten out the spirit of valour and discipline, and nothing was so little desired by them as the sight of the enemy number of men for whom the officers drew pay, was never honestly maintained, and the ranks were filled with any cheap and beggarly recruits they could pick up A force thus con stituted was no match for the Mahratta troops accustomed to hard fare and harder work "The horse without a saddle was role by a man without clothes, whose constant weapon was a trusty sabre, footmen mured to the same travel and bearing all kind of arms trooped with the horse, spare horses accompanied them to bring off the booty, and relieve the wearied or wounded. All gathered their daily provisions as they passed No pursuit could reach their march in conflict their onset fell wherever they chose, and was relinquisled even in the instant of charge Whole districts were in flames before their approach was known, as a terror to others to redeem the ravage The rallying point of the Mahrattas was the seger diales. Tle rallying point of the Mahratha was the 1820—8s. Fortices of Ginjee, the siege of which was as protracted as the siege of Troy. On hearing that Ram raphad taken up his abode in that fortress Zulfikar Khan was in the first instance sent to capture it, but it e suspicious temper of the eri peror led him repeatedly to change the commanders, and it e operations necessarily languished. Zil fikar was often in collusion with the Mahrathas and it was even suspected it at he contemplated the establishment of an independent authority through their adi, on the death of the aged emperor. It was during the languor of this siege that Suntajee Ghorepuray, having defeated the Mogul generals in the north, appeared before the place with a body of 20,000 horse. The besieging army was besieged in its turn, and Cam bulsh, the son of the emperor, and the nominal commander in chief, was driven to a humbiating convention. Aurungzebe disallowed it, recalled his son, and entrusted the command for the third time to Zullikar But as he was in communication with the enemy, the siege was again prolonged, till the emperor, indignant at his mactivity, gave him the option of its immediate capture, or his own degradation Zullikar now assaulted the fort in earnest, and it was reduced in the year 1698

Ram raja makes Salara his capi
cal 1898.

Kan raja, who had been allowed, through the Connivance of Zulfikar, to escape from Ginjee cal 1898.

Each raja makes connivance of Zulfikar, to escape from Ginjee
cal 1898.

he is native mountains and selected Satara as his capital He was soon enabled to assemble a larger army thun Sevijeo had ever commanded, and proceeded to large ramy thun Sevijeo had ever commanded, and proceeded to large what he termed "the Mahratta dues" through the provinces of Candesh and Berar. The greater point of the maritime forts of the Mahratta had been preserved or recovered, and, with Colaba for their arsenal, they were enabled to keep the sex against the Moguls. On the other hand, the Mahratta cause suffered the severest injury by the death of Suntajee Ghorepuray, who had been the terror of the Mogul armies for seven years. Dhunnajee, his former associate, became his mortal enemy, he was hinted by his own countrymen like a wild beast, through the region which he had filled with his exploits, and was at length brought to by and his head cut off and sent as an acceptable present to the emperor

To meet the increasing audicity of the Mahassia ratias, Aurungzebe devised the plan of separating 100 his army into two divisions—one to be employed in protecting the open country from their depredations—the other in capturing their forts. The fifst duty was committed to Zulfikar Khan, the ablest and the most energetic of the Mogul generals, at a time when they were universally energated by indulgence and reachity. He repeatedly deleated the

AUDULGICE'S INCREASING DIFFICULTIES. fonce 180 Mahirities in the field, but he was unable to reduce their strength, and they always appeare I more fresh after a defeat than his own troops after a victory. Aurungzebe reserved the task of capturing the fortress a for himself, and, breaking up his encampment on the Buiks of the Beema, to the deep regret of his voluntuous officers, commenced operations by the siege of Satara, which was surrendered to him in four months in April, 1700 A month before this period Ram raja expired at Singur, and his son, a child of ten years of age, was declared king under the regency of his mother, Tara Bye During the succeeding five years Aurungzele a.His hereas og During the succeeding two years and Mah service at Cabul without his concurrence ratta forts, but while thus employed he continue ! to superintend the minutest details of business throughout the empire, and not even a petty officer was admitted to the When we are assured that the chunte of India invariably relaxes the vigour of the lody and the energies of the mind, we turn with astonishment to this octogenarian cluef, engaged mecessantly with youthful vigour in the duties of the cabinet or in the severer labours of the field, in a wild country and a vile But all the energy of Aurungzebe was unable to cope with the disorders which multiplied around him The Ruppoots were again in open hostility, other tribes in the north, encouraged by his continued absence, and the const quent weakness of the administration, began to califut a itractory spirit. His treasury was exhausted by a wasting war of twenty five years The Mahiatta chiefs began to recover their forts, and in 1705 he received accounts at one and the same time that they had crossed the Nerbudda 11 great force, and extended their ravages to Malwa, and overrun

Burar and Candesh, and also desputched 15 000 troots to leve contributions in Guzciet In every direction around his cami. north, south, east, and west nothing was seen but the such of villages, the slaughter of troops, and devastation of the country

In these deplorable circumstances the emperor Mahrattas, 1 06 made overtures to the Mahrattas, and offered them a legal title to the fourth and the tenth of the revenues of the six soobalis of the Deccan, on condition of their maintaining order and repressing violence But they immediately rose in their demands, and had the effrontery to require dresses of he their definition, and that the account of their marginding chiefs. The negotiation was therefore brol en off, and the imperial encompenent began to retire to Ahmedrugur, closely followed by the Mahrutas, who plundered up to the verge of the camp, and converted the retreat into an agnominous flight I'wenty years before Aurungzebe had marched from this capital in all the pride and pomp of war, to extend this dominion to Cape Comorin, he now returned to it with the remnant of a discomfited army, and pursued by a victorious A mineralia s foe, and there he expired on the 22nd of February, 1707 By his will be directed that his funeral expenses should be limited to four rupees and a Fe mare 1 07 half, to be defined from the sum be had received for the caps he had made and sold, and that the sum of 800 rupces, which he had acquired from the sale of the Korans he had corned with his own hands, should be distributed among the ngor

Aurungzebe has been considered by the native historians the type of Mogul greatness, and his has an anious to the open of mogal greatness, and made in invested with an indefinite idea of grandeur, even in the minds of Europeans. But this feeling is corrected by a close inspection of the events of his re gn, and it is impressible to resist the conviction that few characters in hen m Indian history have ever been more overrated His personal bravery, his militury talents, and his application to business, and deserving of all praise, but he persisted in a policy which are deserving or an praise, one are persisted in a policy which was inherently vicious, after he perceived the run at was bringing on the emiric. He was engaged for twenty five years in a war, first of intolerance and then of aggression, which calcausted the resources of the country, and hastened

the downfall of the house of Baber The great oriental despetism of the Moguls, like others which preceded it, had nearly run out the usual period of two centuries, and began to crumble to pieces, as soon as the genius or the prestige of Aurungzebe ceased to sustain it

CHAPTER VII

FROM THE DEATH OF AUPUNGZEBE TO THE INVASION OF NADER SHAH, 1707—1739

Or the death of Aurungzebe, prince Azim, who P ru es for the had been banished through his father's dread of throne Sacces in of his door being treated by his own sons when weakened by disease, as he had treated Shah Jehan im mediately returned to the encampment, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, and prepared to march to the capital, but his elder brother, Muazzim, with better reason assumed the crown, and advanced from Cabul to meet his rival His son, who had governed Bengal for cleven years, materially assisted his cause by opportunely bringing up eight crores of rupces which he had amassed during that period. The two armies met in the neighbourhood of Agra, when prince Azim was defeated and fell, together with two of his sons Zulfikar, who had remained neuter during the engagement at once declared for the victor It only immaned to dispose of the pretension of the youngest son of the late emperor, Cam bul sh who was assembling troops in the Deccan Zulfil ar marched against him with a contingent of Mahrattas and defeated him He died shortly after of his wounds and Munzzim who was left the undisputed master of the cmpue, assumed the title of Bahadoor Shah

Jiahra Assett n -Jahra-Jara Auungzebe for thirty years, were now weal end by intestine discord Tara Bye tile widow of vn ]

Ram rula held the reins of government for seven years, in the name of her son Sahoo, the son of Sambajec, the legitimate heir to the throne, had been for seventeen years a captive in the Mogul camp, where he had been treated with great kindness by the emperor, who married him to the daughters of two of the principal Mahratta sirdars in his service Prince Azim, when setting out to seize the prize at Delhi, adopted the sage advice of Zulfikar, and not only granted Sahoo his liberty but furnished him with assistance to assert his claim to the Mahratta throne, on condition that he should hold it as a vassal of the empire Tara Bye immediately proclaimed him an impostor, and collected an army to oppose him, but he succeeded in obtaining possession of Satara, and in March, 1708, assumed the functions of royalty. In this family contest, the great Mahratta chieftains embraced opposite sides, and drew their swords against each other, a happy event for the neighbouring provinces At the end of five years, Sevaree, the son of Tara Bye, died, and her minister suzed the opportunity of superseding her authority, and placing another of the sons of Ram raia, Sambaice, on the throne at Kolapore, which, from that period became the seat of the younger branch of the royal family, and the rival of Satara Zulikar Khan was rewarded for his adherence Dagod Khan

Dasoid Rham from the form of the first Hann was rewarded for his adherence to Balandoor Shah with the vice reyalty of the election of the Decean, which he committed to the care of Dasoid Khan, while he himself continued to reside at the capital Dasoid Khan was a Patan of noble birth, famous throughout the Decean for his matchless courage, and his love of strong drink. He paid frequent visits to Madras, and did not hesitate to particle of Fuglish hospitality. The Madras President always "took care to supply him with laquors, because he was so generous under their influence". It is recorded that in 1701, Mr Pitt, the father of Lord Chalphan, who then occupied that pest, gave him a grand entertainment in the Council Chamber, when the Patan "pledged the chief largely in cordial waters and I reach brandly, amulet a discharge of cannon."

Zulfikar, who was desirous of cultivating peace with the Mahrattas, of whom he had been the most formidable foe in the field for fifteen years, authorized his heutenant to offer Sahoo the chout which the Mahrattas had so long extorted by violence 'Though the concession came only from a local officer, and was not therefore conclusive, it was not the less prized by the Mahratta cabinet, as the first legitimate title they had been able to acquire to their exactions The tranquility of Rajpootana was secured by the same spirit of concession to its three principal raiss

These arrangements which clearly indicated the Sikhs. growing weakness of the empire, appear to have been hastened by the inroads of the Sikhs in the north Nanuk, the founder of the Sikh community, who flourished about the close of the fiftcenth century, taught, that devotion was due to God, but that forms were immaterial, and that the worship of the Hindoos and the Mahomedans was equally acceptable to the deity The sect which he founded gradually increased in numbers for a century, and became an object of detestation to the bigotted Mahomedans, who massacred its pontiff in 1606 In 1675, Gooroo Govind, the tenth spiritual chief in succession from Nanuk, conceived the idea of forming the Sikhs into a military, as well as a religious, commonwealth He abolished all distinction of caste, and admitted all converts to perfect equality, but every member of the body was required to be a pledged soldier from his birth, or his initiation He inculcated reverence for the Hindoo gods and brahming, and prohibited the slaughter of Line After a long struggle with the Mahomedans, he saw his strongholds captured, his mother and children destroyed, and his followers slaughtered, mutilated, or dispersed. These severities exasperated the function of the Sikhs, and planted an inextinguishable batted of the Mahomedans in their minds. Under a new chief, of the name of Buildoo, they issued from their retreats, overran the Punjab, and, if we are to believe the Mahomedan historians, committed unheard of atrocities.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century, dor Shah, 1 12 they had extended their inroads, on the one side to Lahore, and on the other to Delhi, and Bahadoor Shah marched agrunst them in person and drove them back to the fulls He died on his return to Lahore, in February, 1712. after a brief reign of five years, at the age of seventy two

His death was immediately followed by the usual Accession and der Shah, 1 12 feat and death of three of them, when the survivor mounted the throne, and assumed the title of Jehander Shah One of the earliest acts of his reign, was to put to death all the princes of the blood royal within his reach. He appointed Zulfikar Khan, who had supported him through the conflict to the post of vizier, while he resigned himself to the most degrading pleasures, and raised the relatives of a dancing girl who had become his favourite mistress, to the highest honours in the state But his ignoble career was speedily cut short by his numbers. Ferokshere, who had escaped the massacre of his family, by his absence in Bengal, of which he was the viceroy Ho advanced with an army of 70,000 men, and defeated the emperor in the neighbourhood of Agra. The noble Zulfikar khan, the last of the great captains of the Mogul dynasty, whose ancestors had served at in the highest offices for more than a century, was basely strangled by the orders of Ferokshere, and the wretched Jehander Shah was put to death after a rugn of six months ferchater 1 is. Ferokshere, the most contemptible, as yet, of any of the princes of his line, a-cended the throne in 1713, and dishonoured it for sax years ly his vices and his cowardice He owed his elevation to the exertions of two I rothers, Hussem Ala the governor of Behar, and Abdoolla Khan, the governor of Allahabad, generally denominated the Study to denote their descent from the Prophet, and his reign was little el.e but a senes of machinations to destroy them The one was advanced to the post of vizier, and Hussein Alt was a sented commander in chief They were both men of talent and valour, but, as they monopolised all power, they incurred the jedousy of the emperor and the causity of he favourite. Immediately on his accession Fero-shiere indee and two of Mooltan, who had been a caze at Dacca, his chief confiduat, and under his influence sent. Hussen Ali against Aget Sing, the rajy of Jondhore, in the hope that the expedition might prove fatal to him. But he deeppointed his encence by concluding an honourable peace with the rajy, and inducing him to give one of his drughters in marriage to the emperor. The nuptrils, which were celebrated at Dalia with extraordinary splendour, have become memorable in the history of British India by the patriotic conduct of a British surgeon, the particulars of which will be given in a future chapter.

Broomstell Dood Khan, who had governed the Deccap as

m solk, vicerny the deputy of Zulfikar Khan, was removed after of the Deccan. the destruction of his patron, and sent as governor The agreement he had made with the Mahrattas to Guzerat regarding the chout and other dues fell to the ground on his removal and they began to collect them again by violence The office of soobadar of the Deccan was bestowed on the son of Ghazee-ood deen, who has been already mentioned in connection with the siege of Beeppore in 1686. The family had congrated from Turkey, or rather Tartary, to seek its fortunes in India, and belonged to a clique of officials at the capital who were commonly designated the Toorance notles Kilich Khan, the new soobadar, rose to distinction in the court of Aurungzebe, by whom he was decorated with the titles of Asof-Jah and Nizam ool moolk. As it was on this occasion that he laid the foundation of the kingdom of Hyderabad, we shall anticipate the period of his independence by designating him henceforward as the Nizam He was a statesman of great experience and ability, but of still greater subtlety During the seventeen months of his incumbency he fomented the dissensions between the rival houses of Kolapore and Satara, and thus established some check on the ravages of the Mahrattas Sahoo was induced to acknowledge himself a vassal of the emperor, and though in his own circle he assumed the title of king of the Hindoos in the court calendar he was ranked as a Mogul commander of 10,000 Ba alee Vishwu-The increasing contentions of these two branches noth Peabwa of the family of Sevaree had created such anarchy as to bring the Mahratta state to the verge of ruin, when the genus of Balajee Vishwunath placed the party of Sahoo in the ascendant, and rekindled the smouldering energies of the nation Balance was originally a simple karkoon, or village accountant. but rose through various gradations of office till he reached the dignity of Peshwa, or chief minister. It was to his energy that the rapid expansion of the Mahratta power, when it had reached the limit of depression, is to be attributed, and he may justly be regarded as the second founder of its greatuess The Nizam was discharged from the office of

Var.7

Husse n A i South tar of the viceroy of the Decean to make room for Hussein Decean, 1714
Death of Dacot Ali, one of the Syuds, who was sent thither to remove lum from the court. Instructions were at the same time given to Dagod Khan to offer him the most strunuous but covert opposition, and the reversion of the ap pointment was held out to him as the reward of success. But Daood Khan was too daring and impetuous for any subterfuge, and he determined to bring the dispute to an immediate He accordingly met Hussein Ali with his own veteran force, and attacked him with such fury as to scatter his forces like a flock of sheep. But in the moment of victory a cannon hall struck him dead and the fortune of the day was changed. His devoted wife, a Hindoo princess, on hearing of his fate, stabbed herself to the heart. The memory of his reckless courage and his chivalrous exploits is still preserved in many a ballad and proverb in the Decean Hussein Ali, flushed with this victory, took the field against the Mahrattas. but was completely defeated, and they immediately extended their encroachments and enlarged their claims. The emperor. anxious only for the destruction of his own obnoxious general.

gave them every encouragement to resist him, and promised to reward them if they were successful

Hussem Ali, districted on the one hand by the, the Mahratras, incessant plots hatched against him at Delhi and on the other by the depredations of the Mahrattas, who were stimulated by the court, adopted the desperate resolution of winning them over to his cause by conce-sions He entered into negotiations with the Mahratta cal met, which were conducted with consummate skill by Balajce Vishwunath, and resulted in a convention as advantageous to the Mahrattas as it was disgriceful to the Moguls Sahoo was acknowledged as the independent sovereign of the districts comprised in the family jay geer, and of subsequent conquests The "fourth" and the ' tenth" of the revenues of the six soubilis of the Deccan, and of the tributary states of Tanjore, Mysore, and Trichinopoly, were bestowed on him on condition that he should, in addition to the usual fee on such grants, pay an ann all tribute of ten lacs of ruices, furnish a contingent of 15,000 troops, and become responsible for the peace of the Deccan This was the greatest stride to power the Mah Rema ks on thus rattas had yet made and it fulfilled the fondest wishes of the founder of this system of spoliation. It furmished them with a large and permanent revenue, for though the six soubahs had been exhausted by the incessant ravageof war, the assignment granted to the Mahrattas was, at their dictation, calculated on the sum of 18 crores which those provinces had yielded in the years of peace and I "es perity It would apparently have been more to the pecuniary advantage of the Mahrattas to exchange assignments spread over a country which extended from sea to sea, and from the Nerbudda to Cape Comoran, for a compact territory But the great object of the Peshwa was to render the claims of the Mahratta nation as complicated, as extensive, and as vague as possible, and thus to acquire a right of constant inter ference in the revenue administration of the entire Decean, late emperor, he was alienated from their interests by being nominated to the inferior post of governor of Guzerat, when he had every reason to expect the viceroyalty of the Decean He began to collect troops, on the ples of restoring order in the province assigned to him, but in reality to establish his own power in the south, where he had many adherents, both Permitters in among the Mahrattas and the Mahomedans. He sam, June, 1720 marched southward with 12,000 men, and having captured the important fortress of Assecrative, and overrun Candesh, defeated two armies which were sent against him, and thus became master of his position

Meanwhile the young emperor was fretting susinated 17.0 under the voke of the Syuds, and, under the discreet guidance of his mother, formed a combination among the nobles of his court to release himself from their power The plot, which embraced some of the most eminent of the courtiers, could not be concealed from the brothers, but they were distracted by the difficulties which surrounded them on every side. At length it was resolved that Hussein Ali should march against the Nizam, taking the emperor with him, and that Abdoolla should return to Delhi, the court being then at Agra, to look after the family interests Five days after the army had commenced its march, a savage Calmuck, who had been selected to strike the blow, approached the palankeen of Hussein Ali, on pretence of presenting a petition, and stabled him to the heart. In the conflict which necessarily ensued, the partisans of the emperor were victorious, and the army marched back to Delhi Abdoolla, hearing of his brother's fate, set up a new emperor, and marched to encounter Mahomed Shah, but he was entirely defeated, though his life was spared in consideration of his august lineage

Mahomed Shah
Mahomed Shah, now a free monarch, entered tail. 1710
he had been elevated to the throne, and mide a liberal distribution of offices
The others yezra, the tax on infidels, was abolished. The Rajpot rajas of Jouldiproc and

Jeypore were promoted to governorships, while the rija of Oodypore, still isolated by his orthodox dignity, refused all intercourse with the court, and sunk into contempt. Sadut

Oneth of the Code fam 1) Ali, a Khorasan merchant, who had raised himself by his talents to the charge of Brina, was made sockedar of Onde, where he founded the royal dynasty which was extinguished in 1856. The office of vizier dynasty which was extinguished in 1856. The office of vizier was reserved for the Aizam, who came up from the Deconnection to assume the control of public affairs. But be added to the found the new emperor utterly unworthy of his station, immersed in pleasures, and so of his station, immersed in pleasures, and so besotted with a favourite mistress as to have given her the custody and use of the royal signet. He endeavoured to rouse Michomed Shah to a sense of his duties as the head of a great empire which was exposed on every side to danger. But his master turned a deaf ear to this sage counsel, and histened with more delight to the advice of its dissolute companions, who amused him by turning the antiquated habits and solemn manner of the venerable statesman, then in his sevent; fifth year, into ridealle

Instruments. The courtiers to rid themselves of the presence and presents of the viner, sent him against the refractory governor of Guzert, whom their own folly had driven into rebellion. He quelied the revolt at once by his tact, and returned to the capital, where, however, he did not long remain. D s gusted with the weakness and profligacy of the court, and desparing of any reform, he threw up his office and proceeded to the Decean. The emperor louded him with honours on his departure but at the same time instigated the local governor of HJ derabrd M bharz khan to resist his authority, and held out the reversion of the viceroyalty as a bait. The Nizam defeated Mohany and sent his head to Delhi congratulating the Court on the extinction of the revolt. He then fixed on HJ derabad it at cient capital of the Kootub-Shahee dynasty, as it is east of his government, and from this prod

Founds as the seat of his government, and from this period Bydentad, 4 may be dated the rise of the Nizam's dominion

Balajee Vishwunath, as already statel, had Death of Balaice Vishwenath. accompanied Hussem Ali with a Mahratta contingent to Delhi, and, on the accession of Malio med Shah, obtained the imperial confirmation of the grants of the "fourth" and the "tenth," and returned in triumph with the invaluable charters, fourteen in number, to Satara where he soon after died Before his death he completed the arrangements for the collection of the assignments he had acquired, and established a system of the most intricate subdivision of interests, by which ample provision was made for a whole army of Mahratta officials A preponderating power was thus given to the cabinet of brahmins at Satara, which eventually resulted in the transfer of all the authority of the state to their chief, the Peshwa He was succeeded in his office by his son Bajee Rao, who exhibited in the Pates Ran Peshwa, 17°1 highest degree the enterprise of the Mahratta character, and in talent and vigour proved to be second only to Sevajce The interest of the succeeding twenty years of the history of India centres in the alliances, and disputes, and strategy of the young Mahratta statesman of Satara, and the subtle old Turk at Hyderabad, who made peace and war without any reference to the emperor at Della The impetuosity of Bajee Pao's character led Palce Ran s ad him to propose the boldest schemes of ambition vice to School 1727 to his master Saloo He felt that unless employment coul lbe found abroad for the large body of a redatory horse which formed the sinews of the Mahratta power they would be engaged in mischief at home. Fully aware of the decay of the Mogul power, he urged the king "to strike the trunk of the withering tree, the branches must fall of themselves Now is our time to drive strangers from the land of the Hindres, and to acquire immortal renown By directing our efforts to Hindostlin the Mahratta flag in your regi shall fly from the Kistna to the Attol " "You shall plant it on the Himalayu,' replied Sahoo. But he had been I red in the laxury of a Mahomedan seragio, and had lost the boldness and energy of the Mahratta character Bajee Rao found that his own ardour was ill seconded by his sovereign, and was construmed to act under his own discretion, and thus the house of Sevajee waxed weaker, and the house of the Peshwa waxed stronger

The Nizam had appointed his nucle, Humee I Khan, his representative in Guzt rat, in opposition to the court at Delhi The court appointed hir boolund Klian governor of the province, with directions to extinguish this With the aid of two Mahratta commanders Kantajee and Perlace, Humeed Khan was enabled to defeat the Mogul. armics, and rewarded them with a grant of the "fourth' an I the "tenth" of the resenues of Guzerat Bases Ran took advantage of this discord and renewed his excursions into Malwa, granting Sindia, Hollar, and Powar of Dhar, commissions to levy chout in that province, while he him elf proceeded to the south, and exected contributions from the ruler at Senngapatam Alarmed by the increasing audacity of the Peshwa's depri dations, the Nizam endeavoured to revive the di sensions of the rival houses of Kolapore and Satara Sam bujec claimed his share of the assignments which had been eranted to the Peshwa Balance Vishwanath on the six soubahs of the Deccan, and the Nizam as the official represent tative of the emperor, called on both parties to produce their titles and substantiate their claims before him. Sahoo and his colunet were filled with indicination by what they deemed an insolent attempt to interfere in their domestic guarrels Baice. Rao metantiv assembled a large army, and marched against the Nram, who was likewise supported by a large body of Militattes, but he was driven into a position where the want of provisions constrained lum to enter into negotiations, which terminated more favourably than could have been expected

The singular moderation of the Pesliwa on this therefore convious when the August was at his mercy, was not without a cause. He was at the time negotiating with Sir bolund Khan, the imperial governor of Guzerat, who had succeeded in establishing his authority, for the chout and other assignments which had been granted to the two Mahratta officers already mentioned, and, to expedite the batgain, sent his brother to lay the country waste Sir-boolund at length found it expedient to purchase some measure of peace by yielding to these demands The concession was, however, more restricted than that which had been granted by Hussem Ali, and confirmed by Mahomed Shah The -hout was to be calculated on the actual amount of collections; only two or three officers were to be placed in each district to collect the dues, no other exactions were to be inflicted on the ryots, and every assistance was to be given to the imperial authority From these limitations we are enabled to percent how greatly the Mahrattas had abused the power conferred on them by the charters which they obtained eight years before. Never was a more flagitious and intolerable system of extortion invented by human ingenuity than that which the genius of Sevajee had devised, and which the Mahrattas considered it their mission to extend over the whole of India

While Bajee Rao was employed in setting her demands on Guzerat, Sambajee crossed the Wurna and plundered the territory of his rival, Sahoo

He was, however, subsequently defeated, and obliged to sign an acl nowledgment of his cousin's right to the entire Mahratta territory, with the exception of a small tract around Kohpore, to which his branch of the roy alfamily was thenceforward to be confined, and thus ended the dissensions of twenty years. The Nizam, foiled in his attempt to weaken the Mahrattas by internal discord, found a new instrument of misched in Dhaburry, the Mahratta commander-in cluef. He had been intrusted with the Mahratta interests in Guzerit, and was mertified to find that the choirt and other dues in his own province had been carried off by Bajee Ran. Under a feeling of re-entment and at the instigation of the Nizam, he marched towards Stature with $5,000 men, with the avowed object of releasing Saloso from the tyramy of the Perliva, but he was defeated by an inferior force, and fell in battle. The influence of his rival was increased in no small degree by this attempt to distroy it. But the Peshwa acted with generosity, and conferred the office which had been held by Dhabarry on his son, an infant, and entrusted the management of affairs to formative Peelajee Guckwar, who e immediate accessor Gularian was a cow herd, and whose descendants now occupy the throne of Baroda.

Only of Holler To this period also belongs the rise of the fami hes of Holaar and Sindia, destined to take a prominent have in the policies o India. Mulhar Rao Holkar was the son of a hards oan, but, being a youth of adventurous disposition, exchanged the crook for the sword, and by his daring courage recommended himself to Basee Rao, who entrusted him with the charge of levying contributions in eighty four datricts or villages in Malwa Ranoice Sindia, through said to be allied to the noblest families in Rapportana, was of the caste of cultivators, and entered the service of Balance Vishwungth as a menial servant. It is related that on one occasion his master, returning from an interview with the raid Sahoo, found his attendant asleep on his back with the slippers firmly grasped in his hand. Struck with his fidelity in so humble an occupation, the Peshwa introduced him into his body guard. He soon became one of the foremost of the Mahratta chieffains, and like Holkar, received as ignments on the districts of Malwa, which formed the nucleus of the family domain

After the defeat of Dhabarry the Peshwa and the Nizur came to a mutual understanding action lam, for the premotion of the respective interests, and it was agreed that Baye Rao should be at liberty to plunder the Vogul territories in the north without restraint, and that the Nizam spossessions in the south should not be molested by the Viliaties. In fact, the Vizam, the right entities of the emperor in the Decean purchased peachy I thing the Maltatical section that the Sizur south should not be molested by a Maltatical section that the Committee of the emperor in the Decean purchased peachy I thing the Maltatical section that the control of the section of the ruen beyond the Nerbudda Bajee Rao crossed that river in 1732, and laid waste the devoted province of Malwa The Mogul governor, Mahomed Bungush, was engaged at the time in besieging a refractory chief in Bundlecoud, who incould be used of Byte Rao Bungush was soon, in his turn, besieged and was, i senid only by the prompt arrival of his country men from Rohleumd. The Bundlecund ray ic vinced his gratitude to the Feshwa by bequerthing him a third of his territory of Jhansi, and thus was the Mahratta standar ! Maiwa code 1 to plunted for the first time on the banks of the higher kao 1 30 Jumpa The government of Malwa was soon after conferred by the emperor on the Rangot prince, Jey Sing, whose reign was rendered illustrious by the encourage ment of science and the erection of the beautiful city of Jespore, with its palaces, halls, and temrles, and, above all, its noble of servatory The profession of a common creed had promoted a friendly intercourse between the Mahratta and the Rupoot cluefs, and Jey Sing, who was more of a scholar than a statesman, made over the whole province of Malwa to Basee Rao, though not without the supposed concurrence of the feeble court of Della

These concessions only served to inflame the Pales Tan a day manda, 1 36 ambition of Baice Rao, and the necessities of lus position constrained him to extend his aggressions Great as were the resources of the Malnatta state, the greater por tion of the revenue was absorbed by the chiefs who collected it, and only a fraction reached the national treasury magnitude of Baiee Rao's operations had involved him in debt, the bankers were slow to make further advances, his troops were clamorous for their pay, and discipline was weakened by his mability to meet their claims. He therefore demanded of the impural court a confirmation of the assignments on Guzerat which had been granted by Sir boolund Khan. and of the recent cession of the province of Malwa as his personal payerer The emperor or rather his minister. k ian Dowian, offered him an assignment of thirteen lace of rupees on the districts south of the Chumbul, with permission to levy tribute in Painoutana, in the hope that this claim would embroil him with th Rappoot princes But Bagee Ruo having learnt from his agent at Delhi that all his demands were likely to be conceded with a little more pressure, immedistely increased them, and did not scrunle to claim the whole territory south of the Chumb il, the surrender of the holy cities of Benares, Gya Muttra, and Allahalad, and the un mediate payment of fifty lacs of runces. The court ender voured to appease hun with smaller sicrifices which he readily accepted but without abiting the price of his forbearance, or the progress of his army Holl ar crossed the Jumna, by his orders, and plundered the Doorb but was driven back by Sadut Ahan, the soobadar of Onde, and this suc ( a was magnified at Delhi into a grand victory in which thousands of inhidels were said to have persibed. It was even reported that Buce Pao i ad been obliged to retire 'I was compilled' he wrote, ' to tell the emperor the truth and to prove to him that I was still in Hindoostan to show him flames and Mah rattes at the gates of his capital. He advanced towards Della by force I marches of forty miles a day. The consternation in the imperial city may well be conceived. but his object was not to such the capital, but to intimidate the court into concessions and errormstances rendered it advisable for lum to withdraw His moderation encouraged a party of cight thousand horse under some of the nobles to attack his camp, but they were easily repelled by Holkar Buce Lao new retired from the north, recrossed the Nerbudda, and pro-

ce edd to Satara

The Manistra appeared now to be paramount for ell plage in India, and the Nam was considered by the fact it is emperor and his ministers, the only man who could save the empere from extraction. He firm ell precured when too late, the impole; of his compact with Baye. Rao in 1732, which had enabled the Mal rathes to plan for the number provinces without interrupt in, and sugmented their power to an extent which now threatened his own safety and that of every other Mahomedan potentate in India He listened to the overtures of the court, and repaired to Della, where the government of Malwa and of Guzerat was conferred on luni, and all the power and resources of the empire were placed at his disposal But these resources were now reduced to so low an ebb that he could assemble an army of only 34,000 men, with which he moved down to Malwa, while the Peshwa advanced to oppose him with 80,000 Owing, perhaps, to his great age-he was now ninety-three-perhaps to an over confidence in his artillery, which was esteemed the best in India, he intrenched himself near Bhopal, instead of boldly encountering the enemy in the field Bajee Rao adopted the usual Mahratta system of warfare-laying waste the country around, intercepting all supplies, and harassing his opponent with incessant atticls At length, on the twenty-fourth day from the commencement of the siege, the Nizam, receiving no reinforcements, while his enemy called up every Mahratta chief in the Deccan to his aid, was constrained to sign a humilia ting treaty, granting to the victorious Maliratta the sovereignty of Malwa, and of all the territory up to the banks of the Chumbul, and engaging to use ill his influence to obtain the grant of fifty lacs of rupces from the treasury at Delfu But that transure was to find a different destination by ionofhalir It was in the midst of these distractions, which

S) ah. 1 33 exhausted the strength of the empire, that Nadir Shah made his appearance on the banks of the Indus, and India was visited with another of those desolating irruptions to which it had been repeatedly subject during seven hundred veara hat re antecedent

198

The Persian dynasty of the Sofis, which had lasted for two centuries the usual term of Asiatio monarchies was subveited in 1722 by the Ghilpes, the most powerful of the Afghan tribes Shah Hussein, the last of that royal line, was blockaded by them in his care tal, Ispahan, which had then extained the smannt of prispenty, and contained a population of the 000 After the besieged had endured the greatest extremities of this ery and want, the king with his court went out attired in deep mourn ing and give limself up to Mahmood, the victorious chief, and placed the dridem on his Irows Vulmood, after a reign of two years, rendered execrable by his cruelties left all his con quests to his son Asruf Andir Shah, the greatest warner Persia has produced since the days of Darius, was the son of a shepherd of Khorasan His enterprising spirit led him to collect a band of freebooters, their number increased with their success, and he soon found himself at the head of a formudable force, with which he freed Khorasan from the Abdalce Afghans who had overrun it. The Ghiljie king of Persia was the next to feel his power, and was obliged to resign all his father a conquests in Persia Nadir, after his first success, raised Thamaso the son of the dethroned Sofi monarch to the throne, but when he had expelled the Turks and the l'ussians from the provinces they had occupied and restored independence and d gn ty to his native land, he ascended the throne himself, on the assumed importunity of a hundred thousand of his subjects, -nobles, soldiers, and peasants, -as sembled together on a vast plain to offer him the crown

To find employment for his troops and to gratify the resentment of his countrymen, he stands it is acried his arms into the country of the Ghily es, ly whom they had been oppressed, but Candahar was besieged for a twelvemonth before it surrendered. While energed in the siege, hadir sent a messenger to Delhi to domaid the surrender of some of his fugitive subjects. The court was at the time di tracted by the claims of Bajec Rao, and the domaid was neglected. A second messenger was resusanated at Jellalabad. The government of India had from time immemors. I been in the halt of paving an annual subs dy to the highlanders who occupy the palses between Cabul and Pealsawir, and who were in a position to arrest the progress of any invader. In the confusion of the times the

to be searched and sucked, and spared no cruelty to extort confessions of wealth. Of the infamous Sudut Alt he de panded the whole of the sum which be had said his soubh was able to farm, h, and the traitor terminated his existence by bwallowing posson. The governors of the other provinces were likewise had under heavy contributions. Having this subjected Delhi to fifty eight days of ruthless pillage, and exhausted, as he supposed, the wealth of the country, he premared to take his departure with plunder estimated at thirty two crores of rupees Refore his departure he reseated Mahomed Shah on the throne, but annexed all the cominifiament of the Indus to the crown of Persia. He likewise sent a circular to all the princes of Indus to acquain them that he was moving to the conquest of other regions, and had replaced his dear brother Valuomed Shah on the throne of his extensive empire, and that if any report of their rebellion reached his cars, he would return and bloff their names out of the book of creation

INTRODUCTION OF THE ENGLISH INTO INDIA [CHAP

202

diate vicinity of the metropolis new chiefs were, as the Mahomedan historian remarks, "beating the drum of independence" Towards the close of Aurungzebe s reign a tribe of sooders called Jauts emigrated from the banks of the Indus to the districts lying between Agra and Jeypore, and founded their capital, Bhurtpore, out of the plunder of the emperor's camp equipage, and their leader, Chooramun did not scruple to set the imperial authority at defiance To the north of Delhi, a tribe of Robilla Afghans, recently embodied under a circum cised Hindoo, were rapidly rising into importance. The house of Baber had accomplished the cycle of its existence, and the sceptre of India was about to pass into other hands thus reached the verge of a new era we turn to the origin and progress of the strangers to whose lot that sceptre was to fall though at this period they were engaged in the peace ful pursuits of commerce and disaming of nothing so little as the establishment of an empire in India. The main stream of this narrative will now follow the fortunes of the British power, to which the history of the various kingdoms which rose upon the decay of the Moguls will be subsidiary But, it may be useful to bear in mind, that with the exception of tle Pappoot chiefs and the puppet emperor at Delhi, not one of the kingdoms which were subsequently absorbed in the British empire had been in existence even a quarter of a century when the English first took up arms in Hindostan

CHAPTER VIII

PISE AND PROGRESS OF THE ENGLISH, 1600-1756

The find in the Last during the sixteenth century served to queden the spirit of enterprise which green Fizabeth laboured to fester in England, and her subjects were impatient to share in its profits. The splend d and successful voyages of D-ake, Cavendah, and other Faulah navigators to the eastern bemisphere tended to augment the enational ardour In 1983, Fitch and three other adventurers started on a commercial expedition to India, by way of Aleppo and Bagdad. They carried letters of introduction from the queen to the emperor Akbar, soliciting his kind offices to her subjects who were proceeding from a far country to trade to his dominions, and offering the same kindnes in return to any of his subjects who might vi it England. Fitch travelled through the length and I readth of Hundestan and was struck with the splendour of the court, the grandour of the nobility. and the magnitude and opulance of the cities. The information which he collected regarding the commodities of the country, and the industry and wealth of the people, opened up vi ions of a lucrative commerce to his fellow-countrymen petition was accordingly presented to the Queen for permission to send three ve sale to India, but the political caution of her ministers rendered it fruitless.

FCHAP

rupees in bullion It sailed from Torbay on the 2nd of May, 1601, with letters of introduction from the Queen to the princes to whose kingdoms it might resort The new Com . puny had no distinct knowledge of any part of India, and the fleet sailed to Acheen, in the island of Sumntra, where a cargo of pepper was obtained, and a treaty concluded with the Malay In the Straits of Malacea, Captain Lancaster captured a Portuguese vessel of 900 tons, richly laden with calicoes and spices and then steered for Bantam, the most flourishing port in the island of Java, where he erected a factory and left agents The expedition returned to England in September, 1603, with a satisfactory profit to the adventurers the following ten years eight voyages were undertaken, which gave a return of from one to two hundred per cent In 1608 the factors at Bantam represented that the calicocs of India were in great request in the islands of the Archipelago, and a fleet was therefore despatched, for the first time, to the coast of India, but the object was defeated by the jealousy of the Portuguese

The Portugueso at this period enjoyed a com mercial supremacy in the eastern hemisphere, and were anxious to prevent the intrusion of rivals. They held little territory on the continent of India, but they completely monopolised its foreign trade By the possession of Aden and Ormuz they entirely commanded the Red Sea and the Person Gulf They occupied the coasts of Ceylon, and had no rival on the Malabar and Coromandel coasts They were paramount on the Malay scaboard, and held possession of the Moluccas, or spice islands They had created a factory at Macao, and enjoyed the exclusive trade of China well futifed settlement at Hooghly, second only to that of Gov rendered them a most formidable power in Bengal was with this great mercantile monopoly that the English had now to enter into competition. In 1611 the Fast India Company sent two vessels to Surat, and the Portuguesc prepared to resist their advance with four ships, the largest

206 PATRIOTISM OF MR. BOUGHTON FCHAP

the Dutch for a share in the spice trade of the eastern islands, or on the massacre at Amboyna, which continued for thirty years to rankle in the minds of Englishmen, till Cromwell compelled the Dutch to make satisfaction for it In like manner we pass over the contests with the Portuguese for the possession of Ormuz and the trade with Persia, which, when obtained, was not found worth retaining. We move on to the establishment of the Company in Bengul 1620 two of their factors visited Patna, but met with little Tigenglish in encouragement In 1634 a firman appears to have Bengal, 1670 30 been obtained from the empeior, Shah Jehan, for the establishment of a factory in Bengal, but the resistance of Rodrigues at Hooghly was yet fresh, and the residence of their agents was restricted to the port of Pil ley, near Balasore. Two years after, the daughter of the emperor, who was then encamped in the Deccan, baying fallen ill, the vizier disratched an express to the English factory at Surat to rejuct the services of a surgion Mr Boughton, attached to one of the ships, was accordingly sent to the imperial camp, and having succeeded in restoring the princess to health, was desired to name his own reward. In a spirit of the nol lest patriotism, he stated that the only remuneration he would accept was an order granting his countrymen the privilege of second opportunity of promoting the interests of his country At his request the prince granted letters patent to the English to establish factories at Balasore and Hooghly.

The first factory of the Company on the Cororealistment The first factory of the Company on the Cororealistment The first factory of the Company on the Cororealistment The first factory of the Company on the Cororealistment The trade was not however found to be remunerative, and Mr Day, the superntendent, accepted the invitation of the raja of Chun deignee, the last representative of the great Hindoo dynrsty of Beejuyaugur, to remove the establishment to his territories.
In a small village on the coast a plot of ground was marked out, on which, in 1639, he creeted the factory which afterwards expinded into the great city of Madras. To give confidence to the native merchants, it was surrounded by a fortification, with twelve guns, and in honour of the champion of England was called Fort St. George

For fifteen years after this period there is no event in the transactions of the Compuny worthy of attention settled state of England during the civil wars was not favourable to the interests of commerce, and the trade of the Company languished The investments were small, and the profits smaller, but as soon as domestic tranquility wis restored under the Protector, an attempt was made by a Lody of men, calling themselves the "Mcrchant Adventurers,' to break up the exclusive privileges of the East India Company. The arguments they employed for free trade appear at the present day to be unauswerable, but their validity was not lil ely to be admitted by those who had devised the Navigation Act. Cromwell referred the question to the Council of State, who recommended lum to confirm the privileges of the Company, and a new charter was accordingly granted to that body There can be little doubt that, in the circumstances of the times, the decision of Cromwell was sound, and that the power of a corporation was essential to the maintenance of a trade or a corporation was essential to the mannerance of a trade exposed to the carrac and the hostility of the native powers of the East. The Merchant Adventurers were ther fore incorporated with the old Company, and the two bodies united in soliciting a confirmation of their pivileges from Charles the Second at the Restoration — A charter was granted on the 3rd of April, 1661, which, in addition to the usual commercial privileges, conferred the right to make pe ice and to wage war with any people in India not Christians, to seize and deport to Figland all undecised Englishmen, and to administry justice The Company, which existed only for trade, was thus invested with the most essential attributes of government

---

Acquis to an of In the succeeding year Charles II married the Books 1652. daughter of the king of Portugal, and received the Island and dependences of Bombay as part of her dower A grand expedition was dispatched to India by the Grown, under the Eul of Marlborough, to receive possession of the settlements, but after having held it for six years, the ministers of the Cown found that it cost more than it yielded and ceded it to the Company, under whose fostering care the population has increased from 10,000 to 500 000, and the trade has risen from a few lacs of rupees to thirty cores has risen from a few lacs of rupces to thirty crores

The year, in which the Company acquired the Espaced, 1869 I sland of Bombay, is also memorable as that in which the first order for the purchase of tea was sent out by them to the Last Tea had been used at the period of the civil war as a "legalia in high treatments and entertain ments, and presents to princes and grandees," and was sid as high as 100 shillings the pound weight, or 100 rupces the secr But in 1657, Thomas Garrawy, the founder of Garra way s coffee house, which still exists in London, was the first to sell it "in drink made according to the directions of the most knowing merchants and travellers into the eastern countries, and many noblemen, merchants, and placeass resorted to his house in Change Alley to druk the drak thereof He sold it at a rate varying from 16s to 50° the pound But it was not till ten years after that it e Company issued an older for "100 lbs weight of the best toy they could gett to be sent home by their ships." The cons imption in England has increased from one hundred pounds weight to more than eighty millions of pounds

Turning now to the progress of events in Rengul 124, 1869-1889 With the exception of two bilef intervals, the administration of the province was, during thirty two years in the hands of two princes of the imperial family. Soorth Khan and Shaista Khan, under whose wild and beneficent rule it enjoyed repose and increased in prosperity Shaista Khan is charged by the factors of the Company with insatiable reputity, but they winced under every demand, however petty, and they did not deny that he fostered their commerce and obtained many favours for them from Dellu 1664, the French under the auspices of the great minister Colbert, established an Erst India Company in the hope of participating in the tride which had cariched England and Holland Soon after a large French fleet sailed up the Hooghly and formed a settlement at Chandernagar Three years after, the Dutch whose trade had been confined to Balasore, were permitted to establish a factory at Hooghly, but eventurily fixed on Chinsurah two miles distant, as the seat of their traffic, and exceted a fortification capable of res sting the native powers which they named Fort Augustus, About the same period the Danes entered the river, and another the trade of the country Bengal thus blessed with tranquility and enriched by foreign commerce, became the most flourishing province in the empar. The general trade of the Conjane, which had been drooping for many trade of the Conjane, which had been drooping for many years, received a vew impiles from the rajid increase of property in Finglia differ the Restoration, and their exports rose from 10 lies in 1666 to 1.0 lies of rupees in 1682. The ambitious fortunes to which this trade grave bith in Engineericated a brood of interlops, rasing gave use to disputes which at one time threatened to embroil the two Houses of Parliament SI v sta khan ha I been rel eved from the govern In mance of Leursia 1852 ment of Bengal at his own request and the Com-lany a agents in Culcutts toble advantage of his return to the court to solicit a perpetual firman to exonerate them from the necessity of taking out a fresh firman on the arrival of every new governor, for which they were required to pay most heavily It was granted through his intercession, and received in Calcutta with a salute of 300 guns. The trade of Bengal had moreover acquired such importance that the Court of Directors who managed the affairs of the Company raised it to the dignity of a separate and independent Presidency, and Mr Hedges, the first governor, entered Hooghly with a body guard of a corporal and twenty European soldiers But tleee prospects were soon to be darkened by the wild ambition of the Court of Directors and the folly of their officers Mi Per cock, the chief of the factory at Patna, had remained neutral during a local emeute, and was charged by the Mogul governor with complicity, and placed in confinement, from which he was not released without much difficulty The Company's lucra tive trade in saltpetre was stopped at the same time. A rival East India Company had been formed in London under high auspices and great efforts were made to obtain a char ter for it, but the old Company was still patronized by the Court, and was endowed with the additional powers of admiralty jurisdiction, which authorized them to seize and con fiscate the property of their rivals abroad They now soll cited the permission of the viceroy to erect a fort at the mouth of the Hooghly, or on its banks that they might more effectually intercept the vessels of interlopers. The reprisentative of the Mogul had a horror of European fortifications, and, if he took any interest in the question of rival companies, must naturally have desired that the number of investments on which he could levy contributions, should be increased The request was therefore refused, and not without reason, for such a fortification would have given the Company the st solute control of the port and of the commerce of the tro vince. But the viceroy went further, and imposed a duty of 31 per cent, on their goods notwithstanding the exemition at pured by the imperial firman.

Such demands had been often made before, and Moguis, 1634. as often cluded by a liberal donative, but the

Last India Company had become inflated with an idea of their own power and importance, and determined to extort redress by come to war with the Mornlemure They applied to

James II for permission to retaliate the injuries of which they complyined, and fitted out the largest dimament which had ever been dispatched from England to the East Admiral Nicholson was sent out with twelve ships of war, carrying 200 neces of cannon and a body of 600 men, to be reinforced by 400 from Madras His instructions were to seize and fortify Chattagong, for which purpose 200 additional guis were rlaced on board, to demand the cession of the surrounding territory, to conciliate the zemindars, to establish a mint, and to enter into a treaty with the rain of Arracan - in short, to found a kingdom . But these ambitious projects were destined to a severe disappointment. The fleet was dispersed during the voyage, and several of the vessels, instead of steering for Chittagong, entered the Hooghly, and hamlet of Chuttanutty, about twenty six miles down the river, on the site of which subsequently prose the magnificent capital of British India There the viceroy renewed and spun out the negotiations till his troops could be assembled, when he marched down to attack the English encampment, and Job Charnock retired with his soldiers and establishments to the island of Ingelce, at the mouth of the river It was a low and deadly swamp covered with long grass, and destitute of any fresh water It appears incredible that a man of Chainock s experience, who had been thirty years in India, and who must have known the nature of that jungle, should have selected the most unhealthy spot in Bengal for an entrenched camp The Mogul general allowed him to remain there without molestation, well knowing that disease would spare his soldiers the use of their swords In three months one half of the troops were dead, and the other half fit only for hospital At this juncture, when the prospects of the Fenral at an Jone 1, 1689 English were reduced to the lowest ebb, the viceroy made unexpected overtures to Charnock. It appears that simultaneously with the dispatch of Admiral Nicholson's expedition from England, the Court of Directors instructed Sir John Child to withdraw their establishments from Surat and the neighbouring ports, and to commence hostilities on the western coast An English fleet was therefore employed in Hocksding the Mogul harbours, and the pilgrin ships were captured The bigotted Aurungzebe hastened to seek a reconciliation with those who commanded the highway to Mecca, and orders were issued to the governors of provinces to make terms with them Charnock returned to Chuttanutty, and the prefertion was on the point of being completed when the appearance of Captain Heath rehadled the flame The Court of D rect rs on hearing of the failure of Admiral Nicholson's expedition, instead of folling up their ambitious project-determined to prosecute it with in reased vigour, and sent out reinforcem ats under Cu tain Heath Immediately on ha arrival he disallowed the treaty then pending, and hiving (m-

212

barled on board the ships under his command, lying off Chuttanutty, the whole of the company's officers, civil and imitary, proceeded to Barlesore, which he boundarded and burnt. He then sailed to Chittagong, but finding the fortifications stionger than he had anticipated, cro-sed the bay, and landed the whole of the company's establishments at Madras, and not a vestige was left of the commercial fail to which had been reared in Bengal by fifty years of painful exertion.

This fresh insult exasperated the haughty spirit Reconcillat on of the emperor, and he issued orders for the w th t) e ens) for 1690 extupation of the English, and the confiscation of their property His orders were literally obeyed, and the English possessions were reduced to the fortified towns of Madras and Bombas Sir John Child sent two gentlemen from Bombay to the emperor's encampment at Beejapore to propose turms of accommodation Aurungache never allowed his passions to interfere with his interests. He was aware that his dominions benefited greatly by the commerce of the English, the value of which exceeded a crore of rupees a year. that their ships of war could sweep his coasts and extinguish his payr, and above all that it was in their power to prevent the re sort of palgrams to the tomb of the Prophet He was therefore induced to accept the proposition of the commissi ners, and directed the viceroy of Bengal to mvite Mr Charnock back to the province

buck to the province Shasta Khun, who had now governed Beng if for twenty years, solicited permission to ratire, and quitted Dacca in 1689 On his departure he closed one of the gates of the city, and placed an inscription over it to commemorate the fact that the pince of rice had been reduced during his administration to 320 secrs the rupee, and he interdicted any future governor from opening it till rice was again sold at the same rate. It consequently continued closed for thirty six years.

Fatablehment of Shaista Khan was succeeded by Ibraham Khan, Calout, 1800 the son of Ali Merdan, who o mano is perpetuated

214

English, lost no time in inviting Charnock to re establish the Company's factories in Bengal Charnock, however, resented the humiliating as well as vague terms in which Aurungzebe had conceded the restoration of the settlements of the English. in consequence,-so ran the proclamation,-of their having "made a most humble and submissive petition that the crimes they had committed should be forgiven" He replied that he could not accept the proposal unless the emperor granted a specific firman for Bengal, setting forth the precise terms on which they were to carry on their trade in future vicercy sent him a second communication, stating that several months must elapse before the firman could be received from the imperial Court, and importuned him to leturn without delay, offering a compensation of 80,000 rupees for the goods which had been plundered Charnock could not resist this friendly appeal, and embarked for Bengal with the commercial establishments of the Company, and on the 24th of August, 1690, hoisted the standard of England on the banks of the Hooghly, and laid the foundation of the city of CALCUTTA But he did not survive this memorable event more than two years His name is perpetuated at Barrackpore, which the natives still continue to designate Achanul, and a simple monu ment in the churchyard of St John s, in Calcutta, marks the grave of the man who founded the "city of palaces" It was not however, till eight years after that the agent of the Company was enabled to obtain permission, by a present of 16 000 rupees to the viceroy, to purchase the three villages of Calcutta, Chuttanutty, and Govindpore, on which the city stands; though the Court of Ducctors did not fail to remark that

"they considered the price very high " Amb tion of the The sudden sparm of ambition which served Courtgeen icd Court of Directors, in 1645, and induced them to fit out this grand armament to establish a political power m India, did not, however, last more than five years dying indication of it aprears in their despatch of 1699. "Tio increase of our revenue is the subject of our care as much as a our trade, 'tis that must maintain our force when twenty accidents may inter-upt our trade, 'tis that must make us a nation in India, without that we are but as a great n nation in indir, without that we are but as a great number of interlopers, united by his Maj sty's charter, at only to trade where nobody of power thinks it their interest to oppose us, and upon this account it is that the wie Dutch, in all their general direct that we have seen, write ten paragraphs concerning their government, their civil and military policy, warfare, and the increase of their revenue, for one paragraph they write concerning their trade '-But adversity was not lost upon the Court of Directors, from this time forward, and for more than fifty years, their views were confined so exclusively to the pursuits of commerce that in the year 1754, only three years before the battle of Plas y. which laid the foundation of their magnificent empire, they con tinued to inculcate on their expanses, the necessity of "avoid ing an expensive manner of living, and of considering them selves the representatives of a body of merchants, for which a decent frugality would be much more in character" After the establishment of the factory at Cal-Cal with, 1605 cutto, the Court of Directors were anxious to place it in a state of defence. They felt that their existence in to the forth-see of Madras and Bombay, which were impregnable to the assults of any native force. Those forts had leen erected before the Mogul authority was extended over been erected before the alogul authority was extenued over the territory in which they were situated, but any increase of such defences was prohibited by the policy of the empire Ibrahim Khan, the viceroy of Buggal, resisted all the impor-tunities of the Company's cluef to fortify Calcutta, though it was baded by an offer of 40 000 rupes. But five years after that settlement had been estallished an unexpected anter that settlement has been estatished in unexpected event led to the gratification of this wish. Sobha Sing, alanded proprietor of Burdwan, unristed by the proceedings of his superior, created a rebellion, and invited Ludium Klian, the

tude of competitors, but the Company were enabled to obtain a confirmation of their exclusive privileges from the Crown in 1693 A few months after this event the House of Commons passed a resolution to the effect "that it is the right of all Englishmen to trade to the East Indies, or any part of the world, unless prohibited by Act of Parkiment, This gave fresh animation to the interlopers, and many of them turned pirates, attacling the Mogul ships and plundering the Mecca pilgrims In revenge for these injuries, the Mogul governor of burat arrested fifty three of the Company's servants, and put them in irons, and they were not liberated without the payment of heavy contributions In 1698 the interlopers. and others who were eager to participate in the trade of the East, presented a petition to Pailiament for a charter, and accompanied it with the tempting offer of accommodating the treasury with a loan of two millions sterling, at eight percent. Their exertions were successful, and the old Company, who had established British interests in India by century of hibour and expense, being unable to offer more than 700,000l, were ordered to wind up their affairs and expire in three years But the rivalry of the two bodies was found, even in the first year, to inflict the most serious injury on the national interests in India At Surat the gentlemen on the stuff of the old Company were seized by the arents of the new body, and conveyed through the streets like makfactors, with their hands bound behind them, and delivered as prisoners into the custody of the Mogul governor. In every market the competition of the two bodies created a scarcity. and enhanced the price of goods The officers of the native government, courted by two parties, received bribes from each, and oppressed both 'Two East India Companies," exclaimed the old Court of Directors, "cun no more subsist without destroying each other than two langs regnant at the to be fought between them, and two or three years must end this way, as the old or the new must give way"

flect A squadron of four ships of war was sent against them under Commodore Warren, but one of his vessels was wrecked. and so lax was the naval di cipline of the period, that the other three, instead of going in pursuit of the pirates, returned to England laden with cargoes of private merchandize. The emperor, on hearing of these renewed practes, ordered the aribassador to furnish security for the restoration of the captured vessels, and to enter into an engagement to prevent all puricies in future With this unreasonable request be of course refused to comply, on which he was informed that he knew his way back to England He left the camp after seven months of fruitless negotiation, with a letter and a sword from Aurungzebe to the King of England and thus ended a mission which had cost the new Company nearly seven lacs of rupces The embassy itself was a mistake One of Cromwell's ambas sadors—a sixty four gun ship which spoke all languages, and never took a refusal—would have been far more efficacious with this unprincipled court Sir John Gayer and the other servants of the new Company at Surat would not then have been consigned to a pul as a retaliation for piracies they had no means of preventing The King the Parliament, and the nation le

The notice of the case of the fatal results of the firstly they had needed and the two Companies were anal geomated by universal consent, under the title of the 'Unite' Lomeany of Merchants trading to the East, the indenture of which passed it e Great Seal on the 22nd of July, 1702. On the completion of this union the Court of Directors, formed by their representative at Calcutta, that "now they were established by a Pailamentary authority they deemed it a duty inc will ont on them to Englund and their posterity to propagate it of titure interests of the nation in India with vigors". They directed their attention to the building of the town of Calcutta, and give minute directions regarding its streets and times.

FOHAP

220

entrenchment, and mounted it with cannon The military commandant of Hooghly was, on the occasion of a dispute with the Company schief, deterred by its strength from attacking it, and the native merchants who resorted to it in large." numbers were inspired with increased confidence. The Court of Directors then remodelled their Indian establishment, fixing the salary of the President at 300%, of the eight members of council at 401, of the junior merchants at 301, the factors at 151, and the writers at 51, but these madequate salaries were eked out by the addition of commons, an annual supply of madeira, and the privilege of private trade. The trade proved so lucrative that we find the Directors soon after this period, complain that even the junior servants sat down to dinner with a band of music, and rode out in a coach and four From this time forward to the battle of Plasse) the history of Calcutta is little else but a chronicle of the exactions of the native government and the resistance, alternately bold and feeble, of the Company s On one occasion the Directors complain that the extortions by the Fouzdar of Hooghly, who "was mercly tle jackal of the prince and the dewan to discover the prey, had made a great hole in their cash" Then, again, they remon strate against the exorbitant demand of 30 000 rupees by the nabob-that is, the viceroy-and recommend greater discre tion to their agents Two years after, the nabob makes a new demand of 60 000 rupees, but is pacified with half that sum The year after, the sum of 22 000 runees is "squeezed out of them by the Patna king Again in 1717, they com plun that ' the horse leeches of Moorshedabad had been prac tising on their servants "It was notual war which made Aurungzebe restore their privileges" Their servants are therefore ordered to stop, but not 10 seize, the vessels of the Mogul, "for reprisals, like extreme unction, must never be used except in the last extremity' "They never thought of carrying their contests so far as an open rupture with the victory of the whole country, though it might be expedient to speal, and look by with the under governors. But the brought them no respite. Soon after, their native agent was schubooked,' or flagelitted at Moorshedahd to extort a bond of 45,000 rupees from him, which was commuted to 20,000 rupees. Even so late as 1750, the President, having seized and confiscited the vessel of an Armenian niterloper, was fined a live and a half of rupees to compensate the merchant, of which, however, he never received more than 20,000 rupees. It was amidst the constant recurrence of these out rageous demands that the President and council in Calentia contrived to carry on the trade of the Company till the young nabob of Moorshedabad filled up the measure of iniquity by the sack of Calcutta and the atrocity of the Black Hole, and Clive marched up to Moorshedabad and seated a nabob of hose of the company till was a seated a nabob of measurement of the seated of the company till was a seated of the company till was a seated on the constant of the seated of the company till was a seated on the constant of the seated of the company till was a seated on the constant of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a seated on about of the company till was a company till was a seated on about of the company till was a company til

Monhel Kooles In the year 1702 Meer Juffer was appointed has 1°C2 dewn of Bengul, and eventually viceroy of the three souths of Bengul, Behar, and Ornssa II to was the son of a poor brahma in the Deccan, and was purchased and circumciated by a Persian merchant of laydhan, on whose death he was manumitted II then entered the public service, where his trients attracted the notice of Aurungzebe and led eventually to his being untrusted with the finance of Bengul At the same time he was dignified with the title of Moorshed Koolee Klinn, which was perpetuated in the new capital which formed to Moorshed Koolee Klinn, which was perpetuated in the new capital which is founded, Moorshed-thou own on the throne of the three provinces

where his vients attracted the notice of Aurungsebe and leaverneually to his being intrusted with the finance of Bengal At the same time he was signified with the title of Moorshed Koolee Khine, which was perpetuated in the new capital which he founded, Moorshedthol

Fr. may 100

His municated no little peliousy of the growing Fraintiffer power of the Company, and interfered to such an extent with their trude that the President was induced to serd an embass to Delhi to seek a redress of gricanaces. Two of the senior officers in the service were selected for this office, I uit their appeal was thwarted at every point by the agents of the Bengal victory, and not lessly the profligate courtiers of Ferokslere. At length, however, their missin was interpretedly crowned with success when they were on the eve of handoning it. The emperor, as a sted in a former

SYSTEM OF MOORSHED KOOLEE PHAY chapter, was betrothed to the daughter of Aject Sing, the 1aja of Joudhpore, whom Hussem Ali had brought with him to the court But the marriage was interrupted by a discase from which the imperial physicians were unable to relieve Ferokshere The surgeon of the embassy, Mr Hamilton was called in and effected a complete cure He was desired to name his own recompense, and, with the same feeling of patriotism which had distinguished Mr Boughton, he asked only for the concessions which the British envoys had hitherto solicited in voin His request was granted, and thirty four patents embracing the different objects of the memorial were issued in the Emperor's name and authenticated by the imperial seal. The privileges now obtained were, that a distuct, or lass, signed by the President should exempt the goods it covered from examination by the native officers of government, that the mint at Moorshedabad should be employed three days in the week in coming mohey for the Company, that all with the ryots, to the exclusion of all middlemen. To facilitate the collection of the public revenue Moorshed Koolee modified this system and divided the province into chullas, over each of which he appointed an officer to collect the rents and remit them to the treusury at Moorshedabad, It was these officers, who, in process of time, claimed zemindary rights, imperceptibly enlarged their power, and having assumed the title of rays, made their office hereditary. The vicerov, who considered a Mahomedan a sieve, which retained nothing, and a Hindoo a sponge, which might be squeezed at pleasure, employed none but Hindoos in these financial duties. This will account for the singular fact that, at the period of the battle of Plassy, all the zemindary raps of Bengal were Hindoos, while the government itself was Mahomedan The vicerov was stern and oppressive in matters of revenue. Defaulting zemindars were subject to torture, and some were dragged through a pond filled with insufferable ordure, which was called, in derision, by/cont, or paradise Before appointing these fiscal officers he caused the lands to be surveyed, and fixed the assessment at 142,00,000 rupces, of which sum 100,00,000 rupees were punctually remitted to Delhi year by year. The viceroy himself accompanied this convoy of treasure the first stage out of Moorshedabad The whole expenditure of government was covered by the remaining 33,00,000 rupees. but so tranquil was the province that 2,000 cavalry and 4,000 infantry were found sufficient to maintain the public authority. Moorshed Koolee died in 1725, and was succeeded by his son-in law Socjah-ood-deen, a Turkoman, who was confirmed by the emperor in the government of Bengal and Oris-a, while that of Behar was confirmed on another. He administered the government for fourteen carrs, and punctually remuted the annul tribute to Deliu. During these two reigns the sum abstracted from the resources of this Bours-hing province and squandered at the capital exceeded that; corves of rupces. Socjah augmented his army to 25,000, and adopted a more magnificent style at his court than his from I father-in-law. The only occupit of any

Гепар

992

ALI VERDY KHAN

CHAP

224

with feelings of intense jealousy by the Dutch, and more par ticularly by the English, who declared their intention to "cut up the Ostender's trade by the roots and not simply to lop off the branches" One of their ships was captured by an English vessel which blockaded the Hooghly. The emperor of Ger many was induced, by powerful remonstrances, to withdriw the charter, and a bribe of 320,000 rupees from the Fuglish and Dutch induced the viceroy to send a force against Bankybazar, which fell after a gallant defence, and the Ostenders were chised out of Beneal marching back at his lessure to Moorshedsbad with a small body of troops, when he received intelligence that the Mintitias were rapidly advancing with 12,000 predatory horse to levy contributions in Bengal, and the difficulties of his reign began

We turn now to the proceedings of the Mah ceeding i 139 rattas after the departure of Nghr Shah It was a fortunate circumstance for India that Bajee Rao was pre-vented from taking advantage of the confusion of the times by the necessity of watching the movements of his formidable rivals, the Guickwar of Guzerst and the Bhouslay of Berar Praye the Guicawar of Guzerat and the Bhousary of Berar Parsojne Bhonslay was originally a private horseman of Satara, who rused himself to notice in that ago of adventure, and was entrusted with the charge of collecting the Mahratta dues in the province of Berar, where he founded the Mahratta state of Nagpore At the period when Holkar and Sudia were only communicrs in the service of the Peshwa, Roghoojco Bhoushy, who had succeeded his cousin Parsojee, was in com-Bionsity, who had succeeded his cousin Parsojee, was meom-mand of a powerful force of his own, with large independent resources for its support. While the Nizam was besieged, a already stated, at Bhopal, he re isted the orders of the Peshwa to join the Milaratta standard, and proceeded on a plundering expedition to the province of Allahabad Bajee Rao resented expedition to the province of Allahabad. Bajee Rao resented this intrusion into his own exclusive quarry, and sent an army to raving Berri, but it was defeated by Reglicogee. That leader was now sufficiently strong to entertrain a jealousy of the ascendancy which the Pestivas had acquired in the Mahratta conticils, and was intriguing to supplant him, in which design he was engerly seconded by the Guickway. The difficulties of Bajee Rao's position were relieved by his own that Reghicogee was persuaded to take the command of an expedition to the Carmite, consisting of more than 50 00) troop a During has ab ence Bajee Rao afficied Nazir Jung the second son of the Nizam, but was repulsed with great rigion? The way was protycled for many months, chiefly to the disadvantage of the Peshwa, and both parties, wearned with a fruitless struggle, at length agreed to an accommodation The Peshwa, dispirited by his ill success and overbest of more whelmed by his debts, started for the north, but expired on the banks of the Nerbudda on the 28th of April, 1740 During the twenty years in which he wielded the power of the Mahratta confederacy he ruised it to the

226

the power of the Mahratta confederacy he raised it to the highest position in India, and his power was equally felt on the banks of the Geleroon and of the Jumna. The impulse and the confidence he gave to the ambition of his countrymen continued to animate them after his decease to fresh conquests, and in the course of twenty years rendered them supreme throughout India. He left three sons—Balajee Rao, Regleonath Rao, afterwards the notonious Raglebox, and the illegit mate Shumshere Bahadoor to whom he bequeathed his pos sessions in Bundlekund. Balajee Rao was placed in his father's seat, Succeeded by notwithstanding the strenuous opposition of the Balajee Rao Bhonslay, and obtained, from his feeble sovereign, a grant of Salsette, Basson, and the districts recently wrested from the Portuguese in the Concan, as well as the exclusive right of levying contributions to the north of the Nerbudda, with the exception of Guzerat, and this brought him into direct collision with Roghoojee While that chieftain was engaged in the Carnatic, Bhaskur pundit, who had been left to manage has principality, entered Behar with a body of 12,000 horse, and, emerging from the Ramghur hills, spread desolation over the western districts of Bengal. All verdy was returning from Cuttack with a slender force when the Mahratta commander encountered him, and demanded the immediate payment of ten lacs of rupces, and, on its being indignantly refused, enveloped the Mogul army with his horse, capturing its tents, baggage, the Mogul army with his horse, capturing its tents, baggage, and artillery, and reduced it e vicercy to the humination of The Mahanas But the Mahratta now mused his demand to a humin dred lacs, and Ali verly resolved to run every rist rather than submit to the exaction. With great gallanty he fought his way to Cutwa, where he considered himself scenre from any further attacks. The rains had by this time com-menced in Bengal and the Mahratta army prepared to return to Berar, but this resolution was opposed by Meer Hubech, who represented the folly of throwing away so rich a prize as Bengal without an effort. Hubeeb was a native of Sheraz, nengal without an electr. Induced was a native of sherical in Persia, and had been a broker at Hooghly, though unable to read and write. He entered the service of the viceroy, and by his distinguished tilents and spirit of enterprise rose high in his estimation, but having been taken prisoner by Bhaskur pundit was induced to accept service with the Habrattas, and for eight years was the soul of their expeditions and the cause of incalculable misery to Bengal. On the present occasion he obtained a large force from Bhaskur and advancing agrunst Moorshedabad, before Ali verds could come to the rescue, plunds red the subupts and despoled it e bank ing house of Jugut Sett of two crores and a half of rupees. On the appearance of Ali verdy, Meer Hubeeb recro-sed the over, and laid waste the country from Balasore to Raimabal hver, and that waste the country from barrsore to majoritar the got possess on of Hooghly by a stratagem. The wretched inhibitants crowded into the foreign factories, and more especially to Calcutta, for protection from this storm and the President sought permission of the habob to surround the The Mahrata dua, 1 2 was read ly conceded and the work was commenced and prosecuted with vigour, but suspended on the retirement of the enemy. This was the celebrated Mahratta ditch which, though it has d sappeared, like the old walls of London, still continues to mark it e munic pal boundaries of the city, and has fixed on its citizens the sobriquet of the Inhabitants of the Ditch

Contact Ha. Before the close of the rains, Ali verily crossed rata lawses, the river with the army he full recruited and the Mahratta general was eventually defeated and obliged to evacuate the province Roghooge who I id returned from the Carriate expedition, determined to support his pretensions in Bengal, and entered the province with a large army. On the first appearance of the Mahrattas, Ah verdy had applied for aid to the court of Delli, and the emperor invoked the succour of the Peshwa, offering him an assignment on the Bengal treasury, and a confirmation of the grant of Malwa Balajce Rao, with his old grudge against Roghoojce, readily accepted the offer, and murched with a large force through Allahabad and Behar to the gates of Moorshedabad, where he is said to have exacted a crore of rupees from Ali verdy as the price of his services, after which he marched against Roghoojee, defeated his army, and despoiled him of the plunder he had required Soon after, the two Mahratta chiefs found that their views would be most effectually promoted by coming to an understanding The Peshwa agreed to assign the right to lay contributions from Oude, Behar, Bengal, and Orissa, to Roghoojee, who agreed, on his part, not to interfere with any of the plates or acquisitions of the Pesh-The next year, 1744, Roghoojee sent Bhaskur pundit to renew his ravages in Bengal, when Ah verdy invergled him to an interview, and by an act of the basest treachery caused him to be assassinated, upon which his army dispersed. This crime did not long remain unavenged The Mustapla, 1745 next year witnessed the revolt of his great gene ral, Mustapha Khan, who had been employed to decoy the Mahratta general to the fatal conference Mustapha was the head of the Afghan troops who formed the strength of the Bengal army, and it was chiefly to his talents and valour that All verdy was indebted for his elevation The government of Behar, which had been promised him, was refused by the viceroy, and he marched into that province with an army of 8 000 horse and a large body of infintry, and, at the same time, invited the Mahrattas to invide Bengal anew The viceloy, menaced by this double attack, manifested the utmost vigour, though then verging on seventy, and took the field with the Afghan generals who still remained faithful to him Mustapha was at length defeated near Jugudeshpore and slain, and his body was quartered and exposed on the walls of Patna The Mahrattas who were advancing to his aid retreated on hearing of his death, but they returned the next year, and, for four successive seasons raviged all the d stricts on the right bank of the river The revollection of these devastations was not effaced for generations, and to a late period in the present century the dread of the Burgees, by which name the Mahrattia were designated, continued to haunt the natives from Balasore to Pajmahal The vicercy, worn out by the inroads which half r ten years harassed his wretched subjects and ext susted his own treasury, was compelled, in 1751, to purchase peace by agreeing to an Peace with the annual payment of twelve lace of rupees as the Mahrattas, 1 51 clout of Bengal and the cession of the province of Orissa. The chout ceased, as a matter of course, seven vers after, when British authority became paramount in Beneal, but the province continued in the possession of the Na roore family for half a century had two doughter; one married to his neglicity. Mortir Ali, the most truckled and long medical prince in the Decren, the other to Chunda Sahih, distinguished equally by has takets and his liberality. In 1736 he obtained possession of the impregnal le fortress of Trichinopoly by treachery, siezed the surroun ling country, and extinguished the independence of the regning family. Soon after come the great Mahritta invasion, under Righes; is Bloosly. Dost Ali advanced to meet him; lat was defected and slum. The Mahritta then proceeded to key contributions in every direction, until tary were bought off with the protonse of a crore of rupes, to be paid by instalments by Suffder Ali, the son of Dost Ali, who now assumed the title of rabob of the Carnatic. During this irruption Chunda, Subb placed his family, for greater security, under the protection of the French at Pondeherry, which led to unportant results.

The popularity of Chunda Sahib had, however, created apprehensions in the mind of Sufdur Ali, and it was a part of his compact with the Mahrattas that they should return the next year and extingual his power; they should return the mea year and extinguous as pertaining the principality of Trichinopoly for themselves.

They came down, accordingly, in 1711 and laid stege to that fort, which Chunda Salab defend d with great skill and valour for three months, but was eventually constrained to capitulate; and as he was considered the ablest and most formidable sol her in the south, he was conveyed to Satara and placed in strict confinement. Morari Rao, the Mahratta chief of Gooty, with 14,000 men, kept possession of the fort and territory of Trichinopoly A year after, Sufdur Ali was assessmated ly Mortiz Ali, who proclaimed himself nabob, but the friends and relatives of the murdered prince withdraw his infant son from Madras, where he had obtained shelter, and raised him to the throne Mainwhile the Nizam, who had returned from Delhi to the Deccan, resolved to put an end to the anarchy of the Carnatic, and moved down with an army little short of 50,000 horse and 200,000 foot . All parties hastened to make their submission to this overwhelming forze, and the Nizum placed the administration of the province in the hands of one of his old and faithful servants, Anwar-ood deen, us the guardian of the youthful son of Sufdur Ali, on whom he engaged to confer the nabobship when he came of age. The youth was soon afterwards assassmated, but fountit change Anwar-ood deen is not chargeable with complicity of natels of the in this crime, though he obtained the benefit of it.

Carable, 110 He was placed in the vacant post, and founded the family of the nabobs of Arct, or of the Carantic, subvequently so notorious in the history of British India. Sadut-collah and his son, Dost Ali, had governed the Carantic for thirty years with great moderation and no hitle advantage to the people. To them are apparently due the ment of constructing those works of irrigation which diffused fertility through the district. During their regists the country empred a respite from desolution, and begun to flownsh. The people, grateful for so unusural a blessing, had contracted a warm attachment to the family, while the nabob of the Arzam was considered an interloper and regarded with a proportionate feeling of antitiothy.

CHAPTER IX.

REFORMS OF THE FRENCH TO ESTABLISH AN EMPIRE IN INDIA 1746—1761

When you have now entering on a sense of events, resear it which, though of little significance at the time frequency the most momentous usuals, and fail the foun faith of fur pean supramacy in India. Let to this time the Franch and I rigital in India had been engaged only in the pursuits of commerce, and though they were repeatedly at war, during a period of seventy years, in Lurope, there was without any result The French general, impatient to plant the French flag on the ramparts of Madras, proceeded to Pondicherry to obtain the co operation of the governor, Dupleix.

He was the son of a farmer general, and was sent in his youth to India, where he embarked in an extensive trade with all the ports of the east, and acquired great wealth Having been appointed governor of Chandernagore, he enriched it by commerce till it became more than the rival of Calcutta, and left two thousand brick buildings as a monument of his enterprising spirit. He was a man of mordinate ambition and egregious vanity, but at the same time of vast energy and resources He had been employed for four years energy and resources Its had been employed for four years in forthlying Pondicherry, when Labourdonnais arrived with plenary powers, but instead of co operating with him to promote the common interests of the nation, a jealousy of the reputation he might acquire, induced Dupleix to thwart all his projects. But the indomitable zeal of Labourdonnais overcame every obstacle, and his fleet was rapidly equipped for a descent on Madras On the other hand, the English squadron, sent out for the express purpose of protecting the settlements, was unrecountably withdrawn at this entical inneture, and the commodore abandaned them to their fate Labourdonnais, finding the coast clear, lost no

Labourdonna's, finding the corst clear, lost no states of time in steering for Madras That settlement had grown up from an insignificant hundred in 1610 to a town of 200,000 inhabiting in 1716. The territory extended about five miles along the coast, and a little more than a mile inland. After a century of peaceful commerce, undisturbed by the appearance of any enemy by land or by sea, it was ill prepared for the formidable attack now impending. The fortifications, which had never been strong, were now dilripadated, and the store of immunition was scanty. Of the 500 Europe ans in the town, 200 were soldiers, and few of these had ever seen a shot fired in carnest. On the 15th of September, 1746, Labourdonnas appeared off the town with 1,100 Europeans, 400 Malagasces, and 400 sepoys, or native soldiers, trained and disciplined by Europeans, an expedient which the French were the first in India to adopt bombardment of five days, during which the French did notlose a man, and the English lost only five, and that by the bursting of one of their own bombs, the town and fort were The French commander was interdicted by surrend, red his instructions from retaining any of the settlements he might capture, and lie, therefore, held the town to ransom, for the sum of forty-four lacs of rupees, independently of the merchandize, the military and naval stores, and the money belonging to the Company None of the residents were molested in person or property, and it was agreed that the town should be evacuated by the French troops in three months, and that it should not be again attacked during the war. The success and the moderation of Labourdonnais only served to inflame

the ammosity of Durleix, who protested against the ransom, and declared that the town and factory ought to have been razed to the ground

ing the town to him when captured that he might enrich himself by its ransom. But after its surrender the habob di covered that the prom se had been made only to cozen him, and he sent his son with a force of 10 000 men to drive cut the French They advanced with confidence to attack the handful of Europeans, not exceeding a thousand, whom Labourdonnais had left to protect the town. But the field pieces of the French fired three or four times a minute wille

On the appearance of Labourdonnais army before Madras, the Nabob of the Carnatic, An war-ood deen, sent an agent to Pondicherry to and he was thrown into the Bastile where he incered for three years, and died of a broken heart on his liberation. DeSat of malve remonstrate on the presumption of the French in attacking a settlement in his dominions which was under his protection

Dupleix endeavoured to pacify him by the prome e of deliver

236

Madras The governor and the principal inhabitants were declared prisoners of war and marched down to Pondicherry, where, under pretence of doing them honour, they were . marched through the streets, amidst the icers of fifty thousand spectators Dupleix followed up this act of bad faith by laying siege to Fort St Divid, another settlement of the Company on the Coast, about a hundred miles south of Madras, which was at the time defended only by 200 European troops The English chief solicited the aid of the Nabob of the Carnatic, who was smarting under the disgrace inflicted on his son at Madras, and readily advanced with a large force A French detachment was unexpectedly attacled by the Nabob's general, and seized with a panic, and retired in disorder to Pondicherry with considerable loss Dupleix who had a thorough knowledge of the native character, now set himself to detach the Nabob from the English alliance The singular departure of the English fleet in the preceding year, and the arrival of four French vessels with reinforce ments, enabled him to deers the one, and to extol the resources of the other An Asiatic prince never considers himself bound by any principle of honour, or even consistency, his own supposed advantage is the only rule of his conduct, and he changes sides without the smallest scruyle Duyleix succoeded in persuading the Nabob that the English were the weaker party, and the Nabob did not hesitate for a moment to abandon them. His son was accordagly sent to Pondicherry to form an alliance with Dupleix, by whom he was received with the greatest estentation, and loaded with presents The French new advanced against St. David a second time with a greater force. Lut a large fleet was deseried in the offing, which proved to be an Eigl sh armiment. and the besiegers retreated rapidly to Pondicherry

This arm ment, which had been desputched from Fro resident Fingland for the defence of the Company a settle ments, under the command of Admiral Boscawen armsed off Fort St. David on the 5th of August, and was immediately joined by the vessels of Admiral Griffin. The function of the two squadrons formed the largest mantime force which had ever been seen in the eastern sens. It consists of more than tharty vessels, none of which were of less

Fisted of more than thirty vessels, none of which were of less than 500 tons, and thirteen of them men of war of the Lue The English troops now on the Coast comprised in all 3,770 Europeans, 300 topas es and 2,000 sepoys, equal to my entryprise. The Nabob still changing sides as the power of the English or the French appeared to predominate, promised. the aid of a body of his troops Every bosom was beating with the hope that the loss of Madras would be avenged by the capture of Pondicherry, but the English were subjected to a bitter di appointment. The army began its march to that settlement on the 8th of August, and the siege was prosecuted for fifty days but, no with standing the valour of the officers and men, it was at length disgracefully raised, after more than a thousand-European lives had been sacrificed Seldom, if ever, he any siege in India exhibited more egre gious blunders on the part of the commanders. Duplex announced the abandonment of the siege as a magnificent triumph of the French arms, to all the various princes of Ind a. not forgetting even the great Mogul, and he received from all quarters the most flattering compliments on his own ablist and the valour of his nation For the tune, the French were regarded as the greatest European power in the Decenn and the English who had not only lost their own settlement, but fulled to capture that of their rivals sunk into contempt ton was received of the suspension of hostilities in Euroje, which ended in the peace of \(^1\) ix la Chapalle, and Madras was restored to the East India Company

| Excus of \(^1\) ix.
| This war, of little more than two years duration is years as opens a new era in the p billies of India In 1746, in ither the English nor the French were viewed by the native rulers in any other light than as in file sive triders. By the end of 1749, they had come out as great military powers

Seven days after the retirement of the English force, informa-

whose alliance or opposition was an object of importance to the princes of the country. It might have been expected that on the return of peace both parties would lay sade their armour, and return to the counting house. But as the cloquent historian of these trunsictions, who was at the time at Madras, observes, "The war had brought to Pondichery and Port St David, a number of troops greatly superior to any which either of the two nations had assembled in Indra, and as if it was impossible that a military force which feels itself capable of enterprises should refrain from attempting them, the two settlements, no longer authorised to fight with each other, took the resolution of employing their arms in the contests of the princes of the country, the English with great indiscretion, the French with the utmost ambition.

The English were the first to take the field. Expedition to Devi-cotta, 1749 The little principality of Tanjore, seventy miles long and sixty in breadth, with the history of which the reader is already acquainted, was at this time governed by Pretap Sing, the fifth in succession from the Mahratta chicftain who had conquered it His brother, Sahoojee, who had been deposed for his imbecility, applied to the governor of Madras to reseat him on the throne, engaging to defray all the expenses of the expedition and to cede the town and district of Devi cotta, at the mouth of the Coleroon English had no right to interfere in this foreign quarrel, but their troops were unemployed, and the opportunity was very tempting This forms, perhaps, the only instance during a century of warfare of an expedition undertaken by them without any plea of necessity The force which was sent to conquer Tanjore consisted of 430 Europeans and 1,000 sepsys, with eight field pieces and mortars, under the command of Major Stringer Lawrence, the first of that long train of heroes who have rendered the British name illustrious on the r lains of Hindostan The commencement of the siege was in meequations. The typhoon which ushered in the monsoon, sunk some of the largest of the ships, and inflicted such destruction on the army as to oblige the Major to retire to Porto Novo to refit. It would be tedous to follow the vancel events of the seege, which was our first and most clumsy attempt to take an Indian fort, and which derives its chief interest from the creumstruce that it alforded the first opportunity for developing the genus of Clive. The fort was captured after two insuccessful attacks, but it had now begone manifest to the Madria Prasdency that the cause of our protegie was un popular and hopeless. The rays of Tanjore, menaced by Chinda Sahib, offered to defray all the expenses incurred by the Company in war, to cede Devicetta with the distinct around it, and to grant a pension of 50,000 rupces a year to his disinhented to Madrias.

≖.i

While the Eveleb converges they was these was the set.

While the English army was thus wasting its Duplers s ambi strength on the walls of Devi-cotta, Dunleix was playing a higher game He had seen a thousand European troops disperse an army of ten thousand native soldiers like a flock of sheep, and he had received the congratulations of the native princes on the success of his arms. He had at his disposal an army capable of any enterprise, and, in Bussy, a general fit to command it. He determined, therefore, to take advantage of the confusion of the times, and the prestige he had acquired, to set up a French empire in the Deccan. Chinda Sahib was considered by the natives of the Camatic. the ablest soldier in the country, and the only man who could deliver them from the voke of the listed Anwar ood deen and Dupleux at once perceived how greatly his ambitious projects would be forwarded if Chunda Salub were placed on the throne of the Carnatic by his instrumentality. He accordingly opened a correspondence with that prince, who had been a opened a correspondence with man prince, who had been a prisoner for eight years at Satera, through the medium of his wife who was reading at Pondicherry under the protection of the French government after much negotiation Dupleix succeeded in obtaining the liberation of Chunda Sahib by the payment of seven lass of rupces, and he as peared on the confines of the Carnatic with 6,000 troops whom he had enlisted when the death of the old Nizam, at Hyderabad, gave a new turn to public affairs

Towards the end of 1748 Nizam ool moolls, the Nazam 1748 soobadar of the Deccan, the great founder of the kingdom of Hyderabad, closed his long and eventful career at the age of a hundred, and four His eldest son, Ghizee ood deen was at the time high in office at Dellu. His second son. Nazn Jung who was with his father at the period of his decease and in command of the army, immediately seized the public treasure and the supreme authority, gaying out that his elder brother had resigned the office of sochadar to him But there was a grandson of the old Nizam whom he had cherished with great affection, and who now aspired to this honour He affirmed that it had been conferred on him by the emperor lumseff with the title of Mozuffer Jung and he as sembled an army of 25 000 men with which he havered on the west of Golconda, watching the opportunity of action Chunda Sahib, hearing of the position and designs of the young prince, immediately offered lum the service of his sword He was received in the camp with open arms, and his troops were at once taken into the pay of Moznifier, who was per suaded to appoint him Nabob of the Carnatic, and to march, in the first instance, to the conquest of that province, on the ground that its resources would be invaluable in the struggle with Nazir Jung A communication was at the same time made to Dupleix inviting him to join the confederacy, and offering him great advantages for the French Company The projosal, if it did not originate with Duplers, was most acceptable to him, and a contingent of 400 Europeans and 2,000 sepoys was immediately sent to join the confederates Their united force, swelled in its progress to 40,000 men, entered the Carnatic and began to levy contributions. The Nabob. Anwar ood deen, advanced to repel the invasion with a force of only half that number, and a battle was fought in July, 1749. at Amboor, fifty males from Arcot, which decided the fate of the Carnatic. The army of the Nabob was completely routed chiefly through the valour of Bu-sv's troops, the Nabob him self was shot dead in the action, and his son Mahomed Ata iled to Trichinopoly, where the family and the treasures of the deceased Nabob had been deposited. Moraffer Jung marched the next day to Arcot The English #4 and assumed the state and dignity of spohadar of the Deccan, conferring the government of the Carnatic on Chunda Sahib From thence they proceeded together to Pend.cherry, where Dupleix received them with all the oriental ceremonies due to the rank they had assumed and was rewarded by the grant of eighty-one village-Mahomed Ali, on his arrival at Trichinopoly, came to the conclusion that it could not be succe sfully defended against the victorious army of Chinda Salub, backed by his French allies, although it was one of the strongest and most import ant fortresses in the south He sent, therefore to implore the as istance of the Engli h governor of Madras, who was, however, without any instructions for such an emergency

CONSCIENT COMMUNIOUS IN THE DECCAN

after two months had been wasted in the siege the rynenginged to pay down seventy lacs of rupces to the illies, and to code more than eighty vilages to the French, around their settlement at Cancal With the view of gruning time, he doted out the money in driblets, but before the first instillment had been counted down, Dupleix informed the alies that Nazu Jung was upproaching the Canatic with an overwhelming force, upon which they broke up their encampment in dismy, and retired to the vicinity of Pondicherry

Defeat of Mozuffer Jung and Chunda Sahib 1749 The army with which Nazar Jung entered the Carnatic to drive out the two adventurers did not full short of 300 000 men, one half of whom consisted of cavilry, and a tenth of mercenary Mahrattas, with 800 guns and 1,300 elephants He sum moned to his studard all the tributures of Hyderibid, and, among others, the Patan rubols of Cuddupah, Kurnool, and Savanore Their ancestors had held those districts under the crowns of Beempore and of Golconda, and they themselves were at the head of the Patans, who were constantly streaming down from Afghanistan to seek employment and plander in India. The encampment of Nazir Jung was established at Valdore, about fifteen miles from Pondicherry, and the Governor of Madras sent an English force of 600 Europeans to join it under Major Lawrence Duplers, on his part, augmented the French contingent with Mozuffer Jung and Chunda Sahib to 2,000 Furopean bayonets. But on the eye of the day fixed for battle, thurteen French officers, who were dissatisfied with their share of the treasure obtained from the rain of Taniore, basely descrited their colours and icturned to Pondicherry The soldiers were panic struck, and followed their example Chunda Sahib fought his way ba k gullantly to the French settlement, but Mozuffer Jung surrendered himself to his uncle, who took an oath to protect lum, and then placed him in captivity

Deplete and The ambations scheries of Duplete were interrupted by this reverse, but he showed himself as great an adept in oriental intrigue as if he had been bred a Mahomedra courter. He immediately opened a negotiation with Nazir Jung, and was allowed to send an envoy to his camp, who had thus an opportunity of ascertung the precise position of affairs. Though the mission of his emissary was not successful, he discovered that the three Patan nabobs mentioned above were dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Nizam, and ready to revolt Dunleix established a correspondence with them, and, with the view of securing their confidence and intimidating the Nizam, sent an expedition to Masulipatam, and captured the fort, attacked the camp of Mahomed Ab, and, after a produgous slaughter, constrained him to fly with only one or two attendants, and then seized on Ginjee, the stronghold of the south, the suge of which had detained Zulfikar Khan nine yeurs These daring exploits at length roused Nazir Jung from the voluptuous sloth in which he was buried at Arcot, and induced him to send two of his officers to renew the negotiations with Dujleix But Dupleix, seeing the game in his own hands, rose in his demands, and required the liberation of Mozuffer Jung and the restoration of lise states, together with the acknowledgment of Chunda Salab as Nabob of the Carnatic, and the cession of Masshipatam and its dependencies to the French

Nazir Jung, indignant at these audacious pro-Nazir Jung atposals, instantly ordered his army to march against the French Though it had been reduced in num kll ed, 1742 ber by the dismissal of many detachments, fifteen days were occup ud in marching a distance of only thirty miles. Scarcity and disease began to thin its ranks, and the habob, weary of a war in which he had wasted a twelvementh to no purpose, conceded all the demands of Durker, annihing were embodied in a treaty But Durker had been for seven months in correspondence with the discontented nabobs, and on the n 0 maturity of the scheme, had ordered his commandant at Ginjee to proceed against the camp of Nazir Jung, as soon as he received a requisition from them Their summons unfortunately reached him before the ratification of the treaty, in total ignorance of which, he marched on the 4th of December, 1749, towards the Nizam's camp, with 800 Europeans and 3,000 senovs After a long and fatiguing march of sixteen miles, he came in sight of it as it stretched over an area of eighteen miles, and immediately commenced the attack His small force was repeatedly charged by different divisions of the enemy, but his field pieces shattered their ranks, and by mid day half their army was in flight. Nazir Jung could not credit the report, that the French with whom he had just concluded a treaty were engaged in attacking his troops. but when he was assured of the fact, he rode up with indignant haste to the three nabobs, who were marching to join the French, and singling out the Nabob of Cuddapah, re pronched him with his cowardice and treachery The Nabob lodged two balls in the heart of his unfortunate master, and having caused his head to be struck off, hastened to present it to Mozuffer Jung

244

Mozuffer Jung was immediately released from because have confinement, and saluted Soobadar of the Deceaus 198 "Never," remarks the great historia of this Deceause force decide the fate of so large a sovereighty. The new Nizam proceeded to Pondicherry, and was welcomed with a grand display of casteria poop The dry following his arrival he was installed as Soobadar, and Duplex, arraved in the gorgeous robes of a Mahonadia omra, appeared as the chird actor in the program. Ohunda Shib was declared Nabob of the Carnatic, and Duplex was nomunited governor on the part of the Mognify of all the country lung south of the Kistaa Thus had this during politician, in the burl space of twenty months, outrum even his own large scheme of ambition 16 find not only created a Nabob of the Carnatic but even a

nx ]

Vicercy of the Decen, and had obtained the supreme control of a kingdom larger than France

But Mozuffer Jung was not to enjoy this dig Death of Mount fer Jung, 1 51 mity long After having made a profuse distril u tion of the treasures of Nazir Jung, amounting to two crores of rupees among his partisans, he left Pondicherry on his return to Hyderabad on the 4th of January, 1701, accompanied by a French force of 300 Europeans and 2 000 sepoys, under the command of Bussy. He had not proceeded more than sixty leagues, when the three Patan nabobs who were dissitisfied with the rewards they had received on the occasion of his clevation, broke into open rebellion Bussy's force was immediately called forth, and his artiflery swept down their battalions, the treacherous Nabob of Savanore wis hacked to pieces, and the revolt was quenched in the blood of those who had excited it. But the irritated Nizun, rejecting the sound advice of Bussy, insisted on the pursuit of the fugitives, and was struck dead by the livelin of the nabob of Kurpool, who was in his turn slain in the conflict The whole camp was thrown into the greatest confusion by this unexpected event, but Bus y never lost his presence of mind. He as embled the bewillered generals and ministers, and, such was the influence he had acquired, that he induced them to confer the vacant d gmty on Salabut Jung tle third son of the oll \izam who was then a prisoner in the camp Tranquility was immediately restored, and the army resumed its progress Leaving it now to jursue its march to the north, we turn to the movements of Chunda Sahib

Chunda Salub proceeded from Pondici erry with 8 000 of his own troops and 8 00 French auxiliaries to breat, in February, 1751, to receive homage as Nabob of the Curante, and then abstract to the segar. Truchappely Mr Sundars now G vernor of Malras, felt that a great error had been committed in permitting Duplar, to obtain a such a footing in the south, and be needed to counteract his schemes by a more decease support of the cause of Mahomed Mi. A large detachment was accordingly sent to the rule of the small I nglish garrison cooped up In the fort of Treinnopily, but the troops of our ally scarcely exceeded a tenth of those assembled under the banner of Chunda Salab. Captain Clive, who accompand the reinforcement, returned to Malaras and urged on the Governor thour portaines of creatings diversion, and suggested an expedition to true, the captal of the Carmaine. Clive, the founder of Carret of Clivs.

Carret of Clivs.

The British empire in India, had gone out to Madras in the civil service of the Fast India Company in 1711, and was present at the surrender of that town to Labourdonnais, two years after I ollowing the bent of his genius, he exchanged the pen for the sword, and obtained an ensign a commission. He distinguished himself in the operations before Devi cotta, where he attracted the admiration of Major Lawrence. He was also at the abortive and disastrous siege of Pondicherry under admiral Boscawen Mr Saunders adorted his advice, and confiled the Arcot ex pudition to his charge, though he was only twenty six years of age at the time The only force that could be spared from Madras consisted of 200 Europeans, and 300 sepors and eight field pieces Of the eight officers who accompanied it onehalf were civilians attracted to the expedition by the example of Clive, and six of them had never been in act on But Clive had seen from the camparts of Madras a mere handful of Europeans defeat and disperse ten thousand native solliers. and he had confidence in his own powers During the march of the troops they were overtaken by a violent storm of thun der, hightning, and rain, but they continued their progress with the utmost coolness, and this circumstance impressed the superstitions garrison with so exalted an idea of their prowess. that they were allowed to enter the fort without opposition The expedition produced the desired effect, Chunda Salub was obliged to detach a large force to Arcot and the pres sure on the English garrison at Trichinopoly was allewated

6 ees of Arcot by Chre, 1751

The fort of Arcot was more than a mile in circumference, with a low and lightly built parapet. several of the towers were decayed and the ditch, where not fordable, was dry and choked up From the day of its occupation. Clive had been incessantly employed in repaying the defences, but the place seemed little capable of standing a siege. Of his eight officers, one had been killed and two wounded in successive encounters with the enemy, and a fourth had returned to Madras The troops fit for duty had been reduced by casualties and disease to 120 Europeans and 200 sepoys, and it was with this small body that Clive sustained, for seven weeks, the incessant assaults of 10,000 native troops and 150 Europeans. On the last day of the siege the enemy endeavoured to storm the fort, but, during a conflict which lasted more than eighteen hours, they were repulsed on every point, and the next morning were seen to break up their encampment and retire "Thus ended this memorable siege," as Orme remarks, "maintained fifty days, under every disadvantage of situation and force by a handful of men in their first campaign, with a spirit worthy of the most veteran troops, and conducted by the young commander with indefatigable activity unshaken confidence, and undumied courage, and notwithstanding be had at this time neither read books or conversed with men capable of giving him much instruction in the military art, all the resources which he employed in the defence of Arcot were such as were dictated by the best masters in the art of war" His charac ter was completely defined in a single expression of the great minister of England, William Pitt, when he styled him the " heaven born general"

Chunda Sahib still continued to beleaguer Tra Per at of the Frank, 1 32. clinnopoly with a large force, and Mahomed Ah was induced, by his terror, to invite the aid of the regent of Mysore and Moran Rao the Mahratta chief of Gooty, as well as the general of the Tanjore troops Chve, on his return from Arcot, proceeded to Trichnopoly, and was employed in various enterprises of a minor character, which, however, served to mature his military talents The campaign was brought to an early and successful issue by Major Lawrence, who, in June, 1752, compelled the French commander Law, to surrender at discretion, with all his troops, stores, and artillery Chunda Salab, deserted by his own officers, yielded himself up to the Tanjorine general, who appeared to be the least inveterate of his enemies The general took the most solemn outh to conduct him in safety to a French settlement, but immediately after caused him to be assassinated, at the instigation of Mahomed Ali, who, after feasting his eyes with the sight of his murdered rival, bound his head to the neck of a camel, and paraded it five times round the walls of the city The war with Chunda Sahib had no sooner

218

n-content of the War with Chunda Sahib had no sooner referent, terminated, than the English found themselves involved in hostilities with the allies who had co operated with them in the cause of Mahomed Ali, so utterly unpossible did they find it to shake off their connection with country politics, when once entangled in them. Tho Mysore regent came forward and claimed possession of Trichinopoly and its dependencies, and the Nabob was constrained to confess that he had secretly contracted to transfer the city. and the territory south of it, to the Mysore prince, as the price of his alliance. It is easy to conceive the discust of Major Lawrence on finding that the fortress which his own government had drained their treasury to secure for the Nabob. was now to be made over to a native chief who had rendered no assistance, and whose fidelity was exceedingly doubtful He retired in discust to Madras taking care, however, to leave Captan Dalton, with 200 European and 1,500 sepoys, to guard the citdel against the artifices of the regent Mean-while Duplex, having recursed large reinforcements from Europe, proclaimed the son of Chunda Salub imbob of the Battle of Baboor Carnatic, and sent a powerful farce to senew the siege of Trahinopoly But Major Lawrence overrx] no took the French at Bahoor, inflicted a signal defeat on them, and a second time captured their guns and ammunition.

The Mysore regent, seeing it vain to expect the results value to expect the results and valuetar requisition of Trichinopoly, or any portion of the time fresh sum of eighty less of rupees, which he demanded in heu of it, transferred his allivance, in conjunc tion with Morari Rao, to the French The town was regul larly bes eged by the confederates, who experienced many viciositudes during the two years the investment listed These various actions it is not necessary to detail, and it may be sufficient to state that the French were three times worsted by the superior strategy of Lawrence, and that, on one occasion, the English sustained a memorable reverse At length Moran Rao, on the receipt of three lacs of rupces from Mahomed the consented to withdraw his force, and not to appear again in the field against the English, the Nabob, or the rwa of Mysore Before his departure, however, he con trived to extort a further sum from the Mysore regent, under the threat of attacking him He was the ablest and the boldest native general of his time, and his little army, com posed of Mahrattas, Mahomedans, and Rappoots, was the poets of Educations, and compact and formidable body of native troops in the south. They had stood the assault of European troops, and, what was of more importance, the fire of field pieces, which were now, for the first time, introduced into Indian warfare. and they had unshaken confidence in each other, and in their chief princes The Court of Directors were anxious to put an end to this anomalous and wasting warfare, and in 1753 made an ear est appe, it to the ministers of the crown for and either to prove into or to turninate it. The ministry ordered a squadron at a indistry force to India, and then remonstrated with the French government on the proceedings of their functionaries.

The French and English had now been engaged in mutual hostilities for nearly five years, mall; exhausting their resources in the cause of native

in the Last. Anxious to avoid a war between the two countines, the French estimate despatched M Godchen, one of the directors of their Fast India Company, to India, with orders to superse le Duplere, to assume the control of their affairs, and bring these hosthities to an immediate close. He planded at Producherry, on the 2nd of August, 1751, and all the schemes of analytion in which Duplers had been so long engaged were at once quenched. He immediately laid down its office, but his vanity was soothed by being allowed to return the emblems of his "Moorah dignity—his flags, and ensigns, and instruments of music, and the dress of his nabolapin, in which he went, in great pomp, to dine with M. Godcheu on the feast of St. Louis"

The negotiators, M Godcheu and Mr Saunders,

Treaty between The negotiators, M Godelieu and Mr Saunders, the Fa i hand agreed upon a suspension of arms at their first the his a meeting A condutional troaty was soon after signed the salunt points of which were, that both parties should, for ever, "renounce all Moorsh government and dig-nity," and never interfere in the differences of the native linics, that the possessions held by both nations should eventually be of equal value, but that they should retain all tl or acquisitions till a final treaty was concluded in Europe Mahomed Alı was, likewise, to be confirmed as Nabob of the Carnatic. The balance of advantage was on the side of the Prench. Independently of the Northern Sircars, beld by Bussy, they remained in possession of a territory yielding eighteen lacs of rupces a year, while that occupied by the English was not of more value than ten lace, but the Fast India Company was rid of the restless ambition of Dupleys India company was rid of the restress amotion of Duplets, we led outweepled every other consideration. The treaty was, however, little respected by those who made it. The 11 k was scarcely dry before the Madras government sent an unxiliary force with the army of their Nabob, to subjugate the districts of Madras and Tinnevelly, and the French despatched a body of troops to subdue Terriore. And as to any definitive treaty in Europe, every prospect of it was extinguished by the war, which soon after broke out between England and France

Fa set Dup etx. Dup lex embarked for Europe in September, lacs of rupces in the public service, partly from his private estate, and partly from funds rused on his own bond Gode Leu refused to audit his accounts, and referred the adjust ment of them to the Directors of the French East India Company in Paris, who, to their disgrace, basely disallowed the greater portion of the claim under the pretence that these expenses had been incurred without their sanction. Durlar was consigned to neglect and poverty-the second instruce of national ingratitude towards Indian servants He merited a different return from his own nation, for, whatever may have been the defects of his character, the French never had an officer more desirons, or more capable, of extending their reputation and power At a time when Europeans, without exception entertained a mortid dread of native armics, he boldly encountered them in the field, and demonstrated their weakness, and, if he had been adequately supported from France, he would probably have succeeded in the great of ject of his life-the establishment of a French empire in Ind.a.

Defore we follow the career of Busey, in the IIII-Laborian orith it is nece sar; to glance at the progress of Mal ritta slains. Subos, the grand on of Savajee, who had been scated on the Mahratta throne for more than fits vears, and had always been inbecide, now exhibited signs of ideoxy—dressing up a favourte dog in gold treede and placing his own plumed turban on his head in open durbar. All substantial power had long since passed into the hands of the Peshwa but the wife of Suhoo was his mortal Fes, and at this erate, indecavoured to weaken him by per sunding her husband, now in his dotage to a lithis kinshim in the rays of kolapore. But Tari Bye who had taken no share in Malantta politics for more than twenty years, suce to death of her son, now came forward and conveyed information to Sahoo, that her daughter in law had been delivered of a posthumous child, whose life she had succeeded with great difficulty in preserving, and who was now the nearest heir to the throne The Peshwa, whether he believed the story or not, determined to support it, and advanced to Satara with a powerful aimy Eyery avenue to the couch of the dying monarch was strictly guarded by his wife, but the Poshwa found the means of access to him, and induced him to affix his seal to a most extraordinary document, by which all the authority in the state was transfeired to the Poshwa, on con dition that he should maintain the royal title and dignity of the house of Sevuee, in the person of Tara Bye's grandson Saloo died two days after the execution of this document. and the Pesliwa dexterously constrained his widow to ascend the funeral pile by giving out that she had announced her intention to do so, and from such an announcement she could not recede without infamy Balaice Rao, the Peshwa, immediately pro-

Supremacy of tl c Peahwa, 1750 Balajee Rao, the Peshwa, immediately proclumed the adopted prince sovereign of the Mahrattas, under the title of Ram raja. The Mahr'tta

feudatories who had been summoned to the Court, accompuned the Peshwa to Poona—thenceforward the capital of Mahritta power—to confirm and complete the provisions of bahoo's testament. Rughioojee Bhonslay received new sumulas for levying clout in Bengil and Bihar, the province of Malwa was divided between Holkar and Sindia, and the old calinate of Ministers was confirmed in office. These appointments were made in the name of Ram raja, but they served to strengthen the authority of the Peshwa. The year 1700 may, therefore, be considered the period at which the power of the Mahritta state was definitively transferred to his family, and the descendant of Scapee became a pupper at Satara. But Tara Bye, though seventy years of age, was mortified by this alumition of all power from the regal sceptre, and called to her auf the troops of the Ginckwar, now the substantive ruler of Guzerat. At the same time she urged her grandson to strike for his independence, but he bad no spirit for such a task, and she reproached him bitterly with his degeneracy, and then placed him in confinement. The Peshwa, who was then on a distant expedition, histened to Satara, and, by an act of treachery which has sulked his character, seized on the Guickwar, but left Tara Bye numo-character, seized on the Guickwar, but left Tara Bye numblested. He felt that by consigning the legitimate monarch to a prison she was in reality playing his game.

To return to the procress of Bussy. After the

To return to the progress of Bussy. After the bossy L52 defeat of the three Patan nabobs and the elevation of Salvhut Jung, he accompanied the army to Golconda, where he and his officers received the most liberal donations. In June the Nizim proceeded with great point to the city of Aurungabad, then considered second in magnitude and importance only to Delhi. But Ghazee ood deen, the elder brother of Salabut Jung, who held one of the lightest posts at the court of Delhi, on hearing of the death of vari Jung, obtained a patent of appointment as Soobidar of the Deccan, and excited the Pashwa by the promise of large pry geers to come down and attack Salabut Jung. The Mahrattas ciny loyed all the arts of their national warfare against Bassy, to whom the Nizim bad confided the management of the carindispatched an envey to Dupleix, affering him the most brilhant advantages if he would detach the corps of Bussy from the interests of his rival and brother To conclude Dupleix. he went so far as to send him a sheet of blank paper with the broad seal of the Mogul empire affixed to it, for hun to fill up with his own terms. But Salabut Jung cut slort all his schemes by inducing his own mother to send him a poisoned dish, which she knew he would partake of, when he found that it had been prepared with her own hands

954

The ascendancy which Bussy had acquired at Bussy obtains the court of Hyderabad raised him many enemits. the Nortlern St care 1753 and even the minister, who was under the greatest obligations to him, became his determined foe, and plotted his destruction In January, 1753, Bussy was oblige ! to visit the coast to recruit his health, and the minister during his absence endeavoured to break up his force by withholding the payment of their allowances and subjecting them to a variety of insults Bussy was oblaced to return before his health was confirmed and marched with a body of 4 500 men to Aurungabad where the court lay The minister, distracted by the appearance of this force determined to seel a reconciliation, to which Bussy, who wished to avoid extremities, was not less inclined. But to avoid all future occasion of discord regarding the pay of his troops, which amounted to torty lacs of rupees a year, he obtained the cession of the four districts on the coast generally hown as the Northern Sircars By this bold strol etl e French acquired an uninterrupted line of coast six hundred miles in extent, viciding a revenue of fifty lacs of rupees a year, which rendered them absolute masters of a greater dominion than had been in the possession of any European power in Ind a not excepting even the Portuguese. The districts were admirably adapted v the bounty of Providence and the la d stry of the inhabitants for a large and lucrative commerce they were protected on one side by a chain of mountains.

and on the other by the sea, find they afforded every facility for the introduction of reinforcements and munitions of year into the Decean

The Peshwa, having completed his arrange-Proceedings of the Mahrattas, ments in the territory ceded to him by Salabut Jung and terminated his differences with Tara Byc. sent an army to levy contributions in the Carnatic, and the expedition was considered the most profitable he had ever undertaken Where the v llages and towers refused immediate compliance with the demands of the Mahrattas, the local officers were seized, and compelled by threats and sometimes by torture, to make a settlement Where no ready money could be obtained, bills were exacted from the bankers and forcibly cashed in other parts of the country When a garnson presumed to offer resistance it was at once put to the sword On the cessation of the rains, Rogoonath Rao, his fighting brother—the Raghoba of British Indian history—was dispatched to plunder Guzerat From thence he proceeded to the north with a body of Sinda's and Holkar's troops, and after ravaging the territories still belonging to Dellin, exacted heavy payments from the Parpoots and Jauts Bussy, on his return to Hyderabad at the

Bussy, on his return to Hyderabad at the Mysew and Sa. beginning of 1705, found Salabut Jung about to masse, 185-58. beginning of 1705, found Salabut Jung about to proceed to Mysore, to extort tribute. The Mysorens then before Trichinopoly were acting in alliance with the French, but Bussy, as a feudatory, was obliged to "attend the stirrup" of his suizerain, though much against lins will. The indicale raja at Senngapatan directed his brother, the Regent, to hurry brick with his troops from the Carnatic, and he was obliged to return without receiving the smallest compensation for the heavy typense incurred in the support of 20,000 troops for three years in that luckless expedition. So completely had the treasury been drained by this continued requirement that when the damind of the Airam had been compromised, through the mediation of Bussy, for fifty six less of rupees, it become necessary to despoil not only the members of the court, famile as well as male, of their jewels and plate, but also the temples of the idols. The next Sear Salabut Jung murched against the nabob of Savanore, who had refused to acknowledge his authority Morari Rao had equally resisted the authority of the Peshwa, and the Peshwa and the Nizum marched against their refractory vassals with a combined army of 100,000 men It was in the presence of this force, the flower of the Deccan soldiery, that Bussy opened fire on the fort of Savanore from his splendid artillery, in such style as to astound the allied princes, and constrain the enemy to send immediate proposals for a surrender, and an accommoda tion was soon after effected through his good offices

The superiority which Bussy had exhibited in annual Bussy had exhibited in aguate Bussy had exhibited in aguate Bussy this expedition served only to inflame the animosity of the Nizam's minister, and increase his anxiety to rid the Deccan of this foreign influence. It was even determined, if necessary, to assassinate him As soon, therefore, as peace was concluded with Savanore, Bussy was ordered to quit the territories of the Nizam, who was said to have no farther occasion for his services He received the message without any feeling of resentment, and immediately began his march back to Masulipatam but at the same time desired the government of Pondicherry to dispatch every soldier who could be spared to that port without any delay On the departure of Bussy the minister of the Nizam applied to Madras for a body of English troops to aid in completing the expulsion of the French from the state The two nations were then at peace, and a convention had been entered into which bound the two Companies to avoil all interference in the quarrels of the native powers But the but was too tempting to be resisted, and the government of Madras was on the point of sending a large force to demolish the power of Bussy in the Dercan, when intelligence arrived of the sach of Calcutta and another direction was given to the expedition Bussy, while yet two hundred miles from the coast found his ammunition running chort and his military chest exhausted, and turned aside to Hyderabad, where his influence would more readily procure supplies of every kind On the 14th of June, 1756, he took up a position at Charmaul, in the neighbourhood of the city Salabut Jung, whom he had raised from a prison to the throne, summoned every tribu tary and dependent in the kingdom to his standard and brought its whole strength down to crush his benefactor Bussy defended himself with his usual still and gallantry for nearly two months, but his position was daily becoming more critical, when Law, marching up from the coast with rein forcements through a wild and mountainous truck, and buffling a corps of 25,000 men sent to oppose him, succeeded in forming a junction with his chief at Charmaul. Salabut Jung, in a fever of alarm, sent proposals of peace, which Bussy was not unwilling to accept, and his authority became more firmly established in the Decean than ever

Towards the close of the year, Bussy proceeded summit of sue- to the districts assigned to him on the coast, to restore his authority, which had been impaired during the recent conflict, and he devoted the next year to the regulation of the government, in which he exhibited not less talent than he had shown in the field. Early in the year. he received a pressing request from the young Nabob of Moorshe labad, to march up and assist him in expelling Clive from Bengal, but, on hearing of the capture of Chanderna gore and the imbeculty of the Nabob, he resolved not to move out of his province But, as war had now been declared between Prance and England, he proceeded to carture Vizaga patum and the other Engli h factories on the coast, but he treated the officers with the utmost I berakty During his absence from the court of Salabut Jung, that helpless prince was threatened with destruction by the machinations of Lie unprincipled minister, who had taken possession of the fort ress of Dowlutabad and of his own ambitious brothers, one f whom, Nizam Ali, had obtained possession of the royal soil and neuroed the authority of the state. The Mahrattas did not, of course, fail to throw themselves into the arena, when they saw the prospect of booty The crown was falling from the head of Salutu Jung, and the country was on the eve of a convulsion, when Bussy started with his army from Rajmundry, and, traversing a country never seen by Luropeans, reached Aurungabad, a distance of 400 miles, in twenty one days

There he found four armies assembled by the different parties to take a share in the struggle for power and plunder His sudden appearance, with a force which all were obliged to respect, combined with the natural ascendancy of his character, at once extinguished all integues The authority of Salabut Jung was restored, the venomous munister was killed in a tumult provoked by his own devices, Nizam Ali was constrained to fly to Boorhanpore, and Bussy, by a coup detat secured the citadel of Dowlutabad, the strongest in the Doggan

Bussy, who had for seven years exercised the chief influence on the destinies of the Deccan, had Fatin tion of Bussy's power 1758 now reached the summit of his grandour The provinces on the coast, which were governed with great wisdom and moderation, furnished abundant resources for the support of his troops, and he had secured an impregnable stronghold in the heart of the country He had placed the interests of his nation on a foundation not to be shaken by ordinary contingencies With a genius which was in every respect fully equal to that of Chve, he had succeeded in esta blishing the authority of France in the southern division of India to the same extent as the authority of England had been established in the north, and it appeared, at the time by no means improbable, that the empire of India would be divided between the two nations But the power of the one was destined to permanence and expansion, the prospects of the other were swept away by the folly of one man At the commencement of the war in 1756, Lally was sent out as Governor General of the French possessions in India, and immediately on his arrival, partly from caprice and partly from envy, ordered Bussy to repair to Pondicherry with all the troops not absolutely required for the protection of the mantime provinces Bussy, who considered obedience the first duty of a soldier, withdrew his garrison from Dowluta bad, and, to the unutterable surprise of the native princes, who trembled at the sound of his name, retured with all his troops from the Deceun, just at the time when he had become arbiter of its fate He took leave of Salabut Jung on the 18th of June, 1758, and, with his departure, the sun of French prosperity in India sunk, never to rise again

War with Praces The command of the armament which the Laby 1738.

government fitted out in 1756, to extinguish the British commerce in India, was committed to Count Lally He was descended from one of those Irish Roman Catholic families who had emigrated to Fiance after the expulsion of James the Second He inherited that implicable hatred of England which the eulige carried with them and was, therefore, fitted, as much by his own animosities, as by his military telents, for the mission on which he was sent. He had been more than forty years in military service, and had guined some distinction in the field but with all his bravery, he was heudstrong, rash, and arrogant. He proceeded to India with a powerful fleet and army, and, after an indicasive action with the Engl sh at sea, landed at Pondi cherry in April, 1758. Before twenty four nours had chyself he was on his march to the Engl sh settlement of Fort St. David It was gurinsord by 870 Europeans and 1,600 sepoys, and, but for the extraordinary incapacity of the commander, might have made an honourable defence but it was secural oadly surrendered after a sege of only a month. The fortifications were immediately rized by Lully. families who had emigrated to France after the expulsion

Lations were immediately rized by Linj Lip starks. The government of Madris raturally concluded radius, 152 that Fort St George would be the next object of the victorious general, and they called in the garmsons from the subordanate stations, and prepared for a vigorous defence Fortunately for them, Lally was as resolutely thwarted by the civil authorities at Pondicherry, as La hourdonnais had been in 1746, and his movements were, at the same time, crippled for want of resources To obtain a supply of money he looked, in the first instance, to Tanjore Seven years before this time, the raja, pressed by the demands of Mozuffer Jung and Chunda Sahib, had given them a bond for fifty six lacs of rupees, which, as being of httle value, they had made over to their French allies This document Lally determined now to turn to account, and proceeded with his army to enforce payment The town was besieged for more than a fortuight, a practical breach had been made in the walls, when an English fleet suddenly appeared on the coast. off the factory of Cancal, on which the French army depended for its supplies Lally, who had only twenty cartridges left for each soldier, and but two days' provisions in the camp, was obliged to raise the siege and return to Pondicherry, poorer than he had left it To his infinite chagrin, the French admiral resisted his pressing importunities and sailed away. with the whole fleet, to the Mauritius Returning from Tanjore, Lally marched in the unanceessus siege of Madria, first instruce to Arcot, which the venul governor 1 35-45 surrendered without resistance Bussy who had now arrived in the French camp from Hyderabad, implored Lally to employ the great resources at his command in strengthening the position which the French nation had acquired in the Nizam's dominions But Lally s head was filled with the magnificent project of driving the Linglish from Madras, and then from Calcutta, and, finally, from the coasts of Index The wise counsel of Bussy was treated with contempt, and Lally serrecly condescended to read his letters Contrary to the remonstrances of the Council at Pondicherry, he now determined to undertake the siege of Madras Lughsh governor had taken advantage of the respite gained while Lally was otherwise employed, to strengthen the defences and to lay in a full supply of provisions enemy brought up a force of 2,700 Luropeans and 4,000

sepoys, with 400 European cavalry, the first ever seen in India. The garrison consisted of 1,750 Europeans and 2,50 sepoys, but they were commanded by the veteran Lawrence, supported by thirteen officers who had been trained under his own eye, in the wars on this coast. Lally sat down before the fort on the 12th of December, 1758, and the seige was prosecuted for two months with the greatest vigour. There was no lack of military skill or courage on either side. But in the 16th of February, when a breach had been made which the French were about to storm, an English fleet appeared in the roads. The French army was sexed with a sudden pane, the treaches were abandoned without orders, and Lally was obliged to retreat with precipitation, leaving fifty pieces of cannon behind him

In the course of the year there was an indeci-Conta baffer sive action at sea between the English and French ficets, and a variety of movements and counter movements by land without any definite result. Towards the close of the year the French troops, who were twelve months in arrears out of provisions, and in rags unable any longer to bear their privations, broke into open mutiny Lally succeeded, at their privations, broke into open mutury leadly succeeded, at length, in quelling the revolt, but was, at the same time, constrained to take the fatal step of diriding his force, and sending a large portion of it to the south in search of money and food. This movement gave a great advantage to the English, but they derived still greater service from the arri val of Colonel Coote, a general second only to Chye, to take with his accustomed energy, and recaptured Wandewash, which the French had occupied in the previous year. In which the French had occupied in the previous year. In January, 1760, Lally moved up to retrieve this loss, and Coole compelled him to fight, to great disadvantage, in the neighbourhood of the town, which has given its name to the battle. Independently of sepoys, the French brought 2 250 and the English 1,900 Europeans into the field on this occasion. Lally sustained a complete and disastrous defeat, and Bussy 202 was taken prisoner; but, in consideration of his high character and his generous conduct to the English in the Northern Sircars, was immediately allowed to return to Pondicherry: Victory appeared now to desert the French standard. During the year 1760, Coote succeeded in depriving Lally of all the places he had taken, and Ginjee and Pondicherry were at length the only possessions remaining to the French. Lally's troops were not only without provisions, stores, or equipments, but without hope of obtaining any. The supplies from Europe had ceased. The settlements of the French, in Africa, in the West Indies, and in Canada, were attacked with such vigour as to leave them no leisure to attend to their affairs in the east. The extinction of the hope they had cherished of cstablishing an empire in India may thus be traced, indirectly, to those energetic measures by which William Pitt, the great minister of England, defeated their attempts to establish an empire in America.

Coote now prepared for the siege of Pondicherry, rendichery, when an event occurred which had well night marred the prospects of the campaign. from England brought a new commission to Col. Monson, the second in command, which virtually superseded Coote. Instructions were, it is true, given that the commission should not be acted on during the continuance of the war, but Coote at once yielded the command of the expedition to the man whom the authorities at home had thought fit to put over his head, and retired to Madras. The gallant Lawrence had, in like manner, been superseded on a previous occasion, and this is, unfortunately, not the only instance we shall have to notice in the course of this narrative in which Government has deposed a general from his command in the full tide of victory. In the present case there was at least this excuso for the conduct of the people at home, that they were at the time ignorant of the great merit and brilliant success of Coote. Monson was builled and wounded in his first independent enterprise, and requested Coote to resume the command of operations, which he did not hesitate to do Pondicherry was now subject to a close blockade. The brave garrison held out till, even at the scanty rations to which they had been reduced, provisions were left only for two days. Lally, worm out with fatigue, ill health, and vexation, capitulated on the 14th of January. As the victors marched into the town, their feelings were strongly affected by the skeleton figures to which the noblest forms in the two Trench regiments had been reduced by long and painful privation. Pondicherry was lovelled with the ground. The instructions sent to Lally by his own government to annihilate the English estitements which he might capture had fallen into the hands of the Court of Directors, and they issued orders to retaliate, and in the course of a few months not a roof was left of this once fair and flourishing colony.

Thus ended a war between the English and

Fate of Lally French for the exclusive possession of commerce and power in India, which, with the exception of less than a twelvemonth, had lasted for fifteen years, and it terminated by leaving the French without an ensign in the country Their settlements were restored at the Peace of Pans, two years subsequently, but they have never again been able to raise their heads in India Lally returned to Pans, and was thrown into the Bastile The French ministry were happy to be able to turn the popular indignation created by the loss of India, from themselves on the unfortunate commander A charge of high treason was brought against him which deprived him of the benefit of counsel, and he was condemned to death by the Parliament of Paris, drawn through the streets on a dung cart, and executed the same day "a murder 'committed by the sword of justice" Thus had the French government, in the course of fifteen years, destroyed three of their most emment citizens, who had laboured with unexampled zeal and the highest patriotism to promote the national interests, and the expulsion of the French Company from the shores of India ceases to raise any emotion of regret when it is viewed as the just retribution of their iniquitous proceedings.

CHAPTER X.

FROM THE CAPTERY OF CALCUTTA TO THE BATTLE OF PANNICT 1756-1761.

Durio these transactions on the coast, a revolution was in progress in Bengal, which resulted in transferring the empire of India to a Furope in power But before entering on the narrative of these events, it is necessary to glance at the progress of affairs at Delhi, though they had long ceased to excress any influence on the destines of Hindostan

In the year 1717, a new and formidable enemy, Abme 1 Khan from the region leyond the Indus, appeared on Abdalce 1747 the scene, in the person of Ahmed Khan, the chief of the Abdulce tribe of Afghans, and of the venerated family of the Sudoozies, whose persons were held inviolate. He was rescued from the Ghilpes, when Nadir Shah appeared before Candahar, and at the early age of twenty three, attracted the notice of that conqueror He was present with him at the sack of Delhi the horrors of which he was one day destined to renew In June, 1717, the atrocities of Nadir Shah, which are without a parallel on the page of history, construined his subjects to rid the world of him Ahmed Khan imme diately after rose to distinction, and extended his influence over the tribes around him, and so great was his success, that he was crowned at Candahar before the close of the year From some metive of superstition, he was led to change the name of his tribe to that of Doorance, but he will continue to be designated in this work, by his original title of Abdalee

His coronation was scarcely completed before he turned his attention to India, as the region in which his soldiers would most amply find both employment and plunder Having crossed the Indias with a force estimated at 15,000 men he overmut the Punjab, and pushed on to Sirthind An army was despatched against him from Delhi without delay, under Ahmed Shuh the eldest son of the emperor, who successfully resisted all the assaults of the Abdalecs for ten days, and on the eleventh, completely decomfited them and construined them to retreat towards their own country. The battle of Sirthind was the last expaning effort of the dynasty of the Moguls, and the last event in the life of Mahomed Shah, who died a month after, in Appl, 1748, after an inglorious regio of twenty eight verse.

Ahmed Stab. His son, Ahmed Shab, was in pursuit of the Empror 1 is. Abdalees when he heard of the event, and returned The Robilias. to Dellu to ascend the throne Sufder Jung the vicercy of Oude, was appointed vizier, and devoted his first attention to the subjugation of the Robillas, who had been expelled from the provinces to which they had given their name, but had taken advantage of the invasion of the Ab dalees, to re establish themselves in it. He marched against them with a numerous but ill disciplined army, and was de feated by a far inferior force The Robillas pursued him into his own provinces, and though beaten off from Lucknow, penetrated to Alluhabad, and set the Emperor and the vizier alike at defiance. In this emergency the vizier called up the Mahratta chieftains, Mulhar hao Holkar and Jyapa Sindia as well as the Jant chief, Scoruj mull, and with their aid com-pletely defeated the Robilla, and obliged them to seek refuge in the hills. The Mahrattas were allowed to repay themselves by it e unrestricted plan hr of the province, which did not recover from the effect of the c raveges for many years. Before his retirement, Holkar, true to his Vahratta instincts, exacted a bond of fifty lacs of rupees from the dispoiled Dob llas

206

The Abdalee availed himself of these commo-Second invasion tions to invade India a second time, and having overrun Lahore and Mooltan, sent an envoy to-

Delhi to demand the cession of those provinces The vizier was absent in pursuit of the Rohillas, the emperor was under the influence of a favourite eunuch, and the whole country was under the dominion of terror The provinces were formally surrendered to the invader. The vizier arrived at the capital too late to prevent this dastardly submission, but he manifested his disapproval of it, by inviting the favourite to an entertainment, and causing him to be assassinated. The incensed emperor soon found a fit instrument to avenge the insult, in the person of a youth destined to play an important part in the closing scenes of the Mogul empire This was the grandson of the first Nizam, and the son of Ghazee ood deen, Who was poisoned by his stepmother. The wouth, whose original name was Shaha boo deen, but who is more gene rally known by his title of Ghazee ood deen, was courageous and resolute, but at the same time, one of the most accomplished villains of the age He had been raised to the post of commander of the forces through the favour of the vizier, but did not besitate to turn against him at the bidding of the emperor A civil war was carried on between the parties for six months in the city of Delhi the streets of which were deluged with blood. Ghazee ood deen at length called Holkar's mercenaries to his aid, and the vizier finding himself no longer equal to the contest, consented to an accommodation, and Independence of retired to his own government of Oude That province may be considered as finally alienated from the crown of Delhi in the present year, 1753 But the emperor was unable long to support the insolence of his overbearing minister, and marched out of the capital to oppose him but was defeated and captured by Holkar The Ghazee-ood-deen infamous Ghazee ood deen repured forthwith to the Mahratta camp, deposed the unfortunate cap-tive, and put out his eyes, proclaiming one of the princes of the blood emperor, under the title of Alumgeer

During these events, the righer, Sufder Jung, Third Ibd on died, and Ghazee ood deen invested himself with Invarion 1756. *the office His insufferable tyranny soon after drove his soldiers to revolt, and he was dragged by them through the streets, without his turban or slippers He was eventually rescued from their hands by his own officers and glutted his revenge by slaughtering the whole body of the insurgents. In an evil hour his ambition led him to invade the Funiab, and to expel the officers whom Ahmed Shah had left to govern it That prince immediately crossed the Indus and advanced to avence the insult Ghazee ood deen, unable to cope with such an adversary, repaired to his camp, and made the most humiliating submission But though he obtained forgiveness. the Abdalce was resolved to obtain a pecuniary compensation on this his third irruption. He accordingly marched on to Delhi and gave it up to plunder for many days All the atrocities of Nadir Shah's invasion were repeated, and the wretched inhabitants were subjected a second time, in less than ten years, to the outrages of a brutal sold cry Ghazee ood deen was sent to plunder the province of Oude and Ahmed Shah I mself undertook to pillage the territories of the Jauts In this expedition he inflicted an indelible strin on his character, by the indiscriminate slaughter of thousands of unoffending devotees who were assembled during a rel gious festival at the shrines of Muttra Agra was saved from destruction only by a great mortality which broke out in the Abdalce army, and constrained Ahmed Shah to hasten his retreat across the Indus The wretched emperor entreated that he might not be abandoned to the tender mercies of his rutbless vizier Ghazee ood deen, and Nujeeb ood dowlah an able and energetic Robilla chief was installed as commander in chief The attention of the reader is now transferred The r rates on the Malabar to the Malabar coast, which had for centuries been to the Mahaor coast, which had not centures been coast of India. The western shore of the Pennsuli is as thickly studded with lathours as the castern coast, from the mouths of the Hooghly to Ceylon, is destitute of them For fifty years the juritieal princes on the coast laid been increasing in power and audacity. Among the most formidable was Conajee Angria, who had raised himself from the condition of a common sailor to the command of the Mahratta fleet, and then declared his independence and set up a terrific piratical power, boasting that he was as great a freebooter at sea as the Peshwa was by land blished fortifications in every creek, bay, and harbour, for a hundred and twenty miles on the Concan coast, but his most important arsenal was in the noble port of Gheriah, about a hundred and seventy miles south of Bombay In 1752, an expedition consisting of three British ships of the line and a Portuguese squadron attracked Colaba, another of his ports, but without success In 1754, his corsurs overnowered three Dutch vessels, respectively of 60 36, and 18 cups, the two largest of which were burnt, and the third captured. The following year the Peshwa and the Bombay government sent a joint expedition against Aperia and Commodore James attacked and carried the strong fortress of Severndroog, without the loss of a single man. The fort was made over to the Mahrattas, though their pigmy fleet of grabs had never come within curshot of the place

The Court of Directors viewed the progress of Bussy in the Decean with great alarm, and resolved to form an alliance with the Pechwa with the view of arresting it, and to send a powerful force to Bombay to coperate in this design. Clive, on his return to England from Madras had been received with great distinction by the Company and by the Ministers, and to him the Court of Directors committed the command of the troops destined to act against Bussy. On his arrival at Bombry, however, in October, 1755, he found the government of the Presidency firmly and conscientiously opposed to the enterprize. They considered themselves precluded from entering upon it by the Convention made in the preceding year between M Godeleu and Mr Saunders, of which their masters in England were ignorant when this design was formed Admiral Watson happening to arrive with the flect from Mudras about the same time, it was resolved to take advantage of the presence of this large armament to toot out the pratical power on that coast, which it was costing the Company five laces of rupees a year to oppose An arrangement was accordingly made with the Peshwa for a joint expedition against Gherish The Mahrattas marched down by land, and Colonel Clive and Admirit Watson proceeded by sec, with 14 vess, ls and 600 Europeans and 1,000 sepoys The fire from the ships set the pirite flect in a blaze within an hour The next morning Clive attacked the fort by land, while the Admiril kept up so vigorous a canonnade from the sea that the defenders were obliged to capitulate in half an hour. In the ar-enal were found 200 pieces of cannon, together with large quantities of ammunition and two large vessels on the stocks, as well as twelve lacs of rupees. The money was immediately distributed among the captors, without any reservation for the Mahrattas, or the Company, and the port and arsenal were, eventually, made over to the Peshwa Admiral Watson and Colonel Clive soon after sailed for Madras, and, on the 20th of June. the latter took charge of the government of St. David, to which he had been apported in England.

x.) °

Semblewith

The brave old Tartri vicercy of Bengil, Alivery of verify, expired at Moorshedbold at the age of Bengil, 118.

eighty, on the 9th of April, 1756, bequesting the government to Seraya Dowlah, a grandson on whom he had long dosted. The youth, though only twenty years of age, was already cruel and profligate beyond the usual run of puril to born princes in India. The little understanding with which nature had endowed him was obscured by intemperance he was the clave of parvistes and buffowns, he had carried pollution into the families of the nobility, and had become the object of general abhorrence before he ascended the throne. His young cousin, Solut Jung, with a character not less

270

abundoned than his own had recently succeeded to the government of the district of Puinca, and sent large sums to the court of Delhi to obtain his own nomination to the viceroyalty of the three provinces Seraja Dowlah resolved to lose no time in extirpating him and marched with a large force to Purneah, but on reaching Raimahal he received a a letter from Mr Drake, the governor of Calcutta which gave another direction to his purpose

Raja raj bullub, one of the Hindoo officers wi om Disputes with the governor of it was the policy of Ali verdy to place in public employments had amassed great wealth in the service, and shortly before the death of the old vicercy had been nominated governor of Dacca His predecessor in that office had been assassinated and plundered by order of Seraja dowlah, and he was anxious to place his family and treasures beyond the reach of the tyrunt, he, therefore obtained a letter of recommendation from Mr Watts, the Company's chief at Cossimbazar-the factory adjoining Moorshedabad-to the governor of Calcutta, and his son, Kissen dass, embarked at Dacca with a large retinue, under the pretence of going on a pilgrimage to Jugunnuth, and landed at Calcutta, where he received a cordial welcome Seraja Dowlah, a day or two after the death of his grandfather, for which he had been waiting, despatched a letter to Mr Drake, the governor, demanding the immediate surrender of Kissen dass and his wealth The messenger, though the brother of the rais of Midnapore the head of the spy department came in a small boat, and was expelled from the settlement as an impostor A second communication was soon after sent to Mr Drake. ordering him peremptorily to demolish all the fortifications which the Nahoh understood he had been erecture governor replied that the Nabob had been misinformed that no new defences had been attempted and that nothing in fact l ad been done lut to repair the ramparts facing the river, in the prespect of another war with France The Nabel was not in a humour to brook the slightest resistance of his will, his indignation was kindled to a degree which astonished even those who had been accustomed to the violence of his grassions, and he ordered the army to march down instantly to Calcutta

Calcutta was ill prepared for such an assault. William, 1 56. During fifty years of peace, the fortifications had been neglected, and warehouses built up to the ramparts The defencele s state of the fortat this juncture was owing to the neglect of the Council, not to the mattention of the Court of Directors After the capture of Madras by Labourdonnas in 1747, they were naturally anxious to protect their settlement in Bengal from a similar fate, and sent orders to strengthen the defences, however the vicercy might oppose them. Year after year were these injunctions repeated, and on one occasion no fewer than 250 recruits were sent out, and the artillery establishment augmented to 114 gunners and four officers. Colonel Scott arrived at Calcutta in 1754 as commandant, with the most stringent orders to complete the fortifications, and, if necessary, to conclude the Nabob by an offenng of a lac of rupees At the same time the Court directed that none but Europeans should be received into their military service, but Colonel Scott represented that there was "a set of men called Rashpoots, natives, on the banks of the Ganges near Patna gentoos of the fighting caste, and he was of opinion that when disciplined they would make excellent soldiers ' The Court thereupon permitted the marrison to be recruited with Rappoots, and the nucleus was thus formed of that army of which a hundred thousand endeavoured a century afterwards to subvert the British Empire In 1755 the Court stated in their despatch that the death of the Nabolimizht be duly expected. that it would be attended with great confusion and troul le, that they trusted their officers had put Calcutta in a state of defence, and that they were to be on their guard to protect the possessions, effects, and privileges of the Company But these warnings were lost on the authorities in Calcutta. who were heedful only of their own pelf, and whose infatuation up the litest moment, was exceeded only by their cowardice when the danger came Colonel Scott die lin 1755, and all the works in progress for the defence of the settle ment were immediately suspended, the militar was not embodied till it was too late, the gunpowder, made by a fruidulent contractor, whom no one looked after, was deficient both in quantity and quality, and there were only 174 men in garnson, not ten of whom had ever seen a shot fired

The army of the Nabob, 50,000 strong, up-Sege of Cal proached the town on the 17th June cutta, June 1 55 every disadvantage. Clive would have made as noble a defence of Calcutta as he had made of Arcot, but the covernor was Drake, and the commandant, Minchin Instead of clearing the space round the fort of houses and encum brances batteries were injudiciously planted at a great distance from it, which the enemy captured on the first day, and were thus enabled to bring a galling fire to bear directly on the fort itself At two in the morning of the 19th a council of war was held, when it was resolved to send the women and children on board the vessels lying off the town But as soon as the water onte was once there was a general rush to the hoats. many of which were capsized and the rest pushed off without order or discipline After the fugitives had reached the ships, a shower of "fire arrows, by no means dangerous, was dis charged on them, and the captains immediately weighed anchor, and dropped down two miles out of their reach ten in the morning only two boats remained at the wharf, into one of which, the governor, Mr Drake, quietly slipped, without leaving any instructions for the conduct of the gar rison The military commander, Minchin, followed his ex ample, and they rowed down to the ships in all haste ample, and they rowed down to the ships in all haste burneder of As soon as this base desertion was known, care nothing was heard on all sides but impreciations

When calmness had been in some measure restored, Mr Hol well was by common consent, placed in command at at was resolved to defend the fort to the last extremity. It held out for forty eight hours, during which signals of distress were made, day and might, to the vessels anchored below the town They might have come up with perfect safety, and rescued the grillant garnson with case, but to crown this scene of u famy, not a vessel was moved to its assistance. On the 21st, the enemy renewed the assault with increased vigour. and more than half the remaining force was killed or wounded. The European soldiers broke into the liquer stores and became unfit for duty A flag of truce was deceitfully sent by the Nabob, and Mr. Holwell, seeing the utter helplessness of the garrison, agreed to a pailey, during which the enemy treacherously rushed into the fort, and the officers were obliged to surrouder their swords The Nabob entered the fort about five in the afternoon, and ordered Kissen dass, the cause of these calamities, to be brought before him, but received and dismissed him with courtesy. Mr Holwell was then ushered into mis presence, and he expressed his resentment that the num in the treasury was found not to exceed five lacs of rupees, but gave him every assurance of protection, and retired about dusk to his encampment

The Back Back and The European prisoners were collected together under an arched versardsh, while the native officers went in service of some building in which they might be lodged for the might. They returned about eight in the evening and reported that none could be found. The principal officer then desired the prisoners to move into one of the chambers behind the verandah, which had been used as the prison of the grirson. Orme calls it a dungeon, but the room immediately adjoining it was used as the settlement church for twenty eight years after the recovery of the town. It was not twenty feet square, and however suited for the confinement of a few turbulent soldiers, was death to the handred and forty six persons, now thrust into it at the sword's point, in one of the hottest nights of the most sultry season of the year. The wretched prisoners soon became frantic with sufficeating lexit and insufficable thirst. The fatal to many At length they began to sink one by one into the arms of death, and the few who survived that awful might owed their lives to the more free ventilation obtained by standar on the bodies of their deceased companions

274

When the door was opened in the morning, only twenty three came out alive-the most chastly forms ever seen the tragedy of the Clack Hole, which has rendered the name of Seraja Dowlah the type of infamy among all the nations of Christendom Yet so little did it appear to be out of the ordinary course of events in the East, that it was scarcely marked by the native community, and was not considered of sufficient importance to demand even a passing notice from the Mahomedan historian of the time. The next morning the Nabob came down to the fort, and inquired whether the Fnolish chief still lived, and when Mr Holwell was borne into his presence, he manifested no compassion for his sufferings, nor the least remorse for the fate of the other prisoners. but reproached him anew with the concealment of the public treasure, and ordered him to be placed in confinement Nabob returned to Moorshedabad, after having extorted large in the days of Aurungzebe Information of this catastrophe was seven weeks Expedition to in reaching Madras, where the military force conrecover Cal cutta, 1756. sisted of 2,000 Europeans and 10 000 sepoys. But, while the national honour required immediate and cation in Bengal, there was a strong party in the council desirous sums from the French and the Dutch, and confiscated all the property of the English throughout the country, and thus was the East India Company expelled a second time from Bencal, as completely as they had been seventy years before, of emiloring the resources of the Presidency in assisting Salabut Jung to e pel Bussy from the Deccan, although the Convention which they themselves had entered into with M Godcheu was still fresh and binding Much time was wasted in discussing whether the expedition should be sent to Hyderabad or Calcutta When the council at length came to the resolution to retrieve the affairs of the Company in Bengral in the first instance, further time was lost in disembarking the royal artillery and stores which Col Adlecron would not allow to proceed when he found that the command of the expedition was not to be given to him Happly it was entrusted to the genius of Clive who was instructed, after the recapture of Calcutta, to march up to Moorshedabad if the Nabob continued refractory, and to attack Chandernagore, if the declaration of war with France, then hourly expected, at ould arrive before the time fixed for the return of the troops Admiral Watson and Col Clive sailed from Madras on the 10th of October with five ships of war, and five of the Company's vessels, on which 900 Europeans and 1,500 sepoys were embarked.

On the 15th of December the expedition reached Recapture of Calcutta, 1 57 Fulta, about forty miles below Calcutta, where Mr Drake and the other fugitives were lying in the vessels on which they had taken refuce. A Mogul fortificat on on the river at Budge budge was soon after attacked. Manick chand the Nabob s Hindoo general who had been left in charge of Calcutta, had arrived there two days before with a large remforcement of horse and foot but a shot happening to was too near his turban he gave the signal of retreat, and the whole body of his troops marched back in disorder to Calcutta Not considering himself safe even there, he left 500 men to defend the fort, and fled with the remainder to Moor hedabad. Colonel Clive entered the dismantled town on the 2nd of January, and the fort surrendered at discretion To impress the Nabob with a conviction of the power and resolut on of the English who had come to avenge their wrongs an expedition was sent about a week after to the important post of Hooghly which submitted without resist ance

The Nabob had persuaded himself that it a known 1 57 English would never again venture to set foot in his dominions, and the news of these transactions filled him with indignation, and he lost no time in murching down to Calcutta with an army of 40,000 men Clive was unxious for an accommodation, and offered him the most moderate and reasonable terms But while the negotiations were in progress, the army of the Nabob was in full march towards the town, burning down the villages as it advanced. Two envoys whom Clive had sent on the 1th of Pebruary to request the Nabob to withdraw his army, if his intentions were pacific, were treated with contumely l'inding a contest mevitable. Clive determined to take the initiative, and, on the morning of the 5th, marched with his whole force, augmented by 600 marines, to the assault of the enemy's entrenchment, which lay to the north east of the town But a little before sunrisc he was confounded by one of those dense fors which are common at that season of the year, and although his troops fought with the greatest gallangry, they became bewildered and disheartened, and he withdress his force with the loss of more than 200 soldiers But the Nabob was still more disheartened He had lost twenty-two officers of distinction. he had never been so much involved in the perils of a battle before and, passing at once from the extreme of arrogance to the extreme of pusillamenty, hastened to make exertures of peace, and on the 9th of February a treaty was concluded by which all their former privileges were restored to the English, and permission was given to fortify Calcutta and to establish a mint, and a promise of compensation for their losses was held out

270

Clive was directed, and had engaged, to return Chandernagore, with the troops to Madras after the recovery of Calcutta, and he has been censured for disregard ing his promise, but in his determination to remain in Bengal he exercised a wise discretion. Information had been received. through Aleppo, of a declaration of war between France and England on the 9th of May in the preceding year Chanderuagore was garrisoned with 700 Europeans Busay, with a commercial dealings throughout the country He maintained the establishment of a prince in Calcutta, and rendered himself important at the Co irt of Moorshedabad He accompa nied Seraja Dowlah on his return to the capital, and became a great favourite with that weak prince He daily attended the durbar, thrust heaself into every affair, and acquired such influence in the public councils that the confederates were constrained to take him into their confidence, as the least of two evils

278

ГСПАР

As the plans of the party proceeded, Jugut Clive joins the Sett the banker, assured his friends that there Confederacy was little, if any, chance of success without the co operation of Clive, and they invited him to join them, holding out the most magnificent offers for the Company Clive felt "that there could be neither peace nor security while such a monster as the Nabob reigned,' and readily entered into their plans not withstanding the reluctance of the timid Council in Calcutta A secret treaty was concluded between the confederates reparation to the English for all losses, public and private and Clive, the chief stipulations of which were that he should march with his army to Moorshedabad and place Meer Jaffier on the throne, and that Mccr Jaffier should make the amplest The whole scheme, however, had well nigh miscarried, through the rapacits of Omichund who came forward in the last stage, and demanded, by the threat of disclosure-which would have been certain death to all the confederates-tlo insertion of a specific article in the treaty, guaranteeing to him thirty lics of rupees, and a commission of five per cent on all payments Clive, on learning of this outrageous demand, came to the conclusion "that art and policy were warrantal le to defeat the designs of such a villain, and he formed the plan of deceiving the man by a fictitious treaty, written on red paper, which provided for his demand, while the real treaty, authent cated by the scale and signatures of the contracting parties, contained no such stipulation. This is the only act in the bold and arduous career of Chive, which, in the opinion of posterity, does not admit of vindication. But it is due to his memory to state that, to the end of his life, he conscientiously asserted the integrity of his motives and of his conduct on this occasion, and declared that he "would do it a hundred times over " When the treaty was complete, Meer Jaffier took an oath on the Koraseto be faithful to his engagements, and to withdraw with his troops from the army of the Nabob, either before or on the day of the battle Clive, having concluded his arrangements, addressed a letter to the Nabob, recapitulating the Placer 1 57 gnevances of which the English had to complain, and stating that he was coming to Moorshedabad to submit them to the udement of the durbar He marched from Chandernagore, on the 13th June, with 1,000 Europeans, 2,000 natives, and eight pieces of cannon On the 17th he reached Cutwa, and captured the fort, but looked in vain for Meer Jaffer, who had, in the meantime, taken another oath of fidelity to his master On the 19th the rains set in with extreme violence, and Chive paused on the threshold of the campaign, doubting the propriety of opening it at the beginning of the rainy season, and on "their own bottom, without any assistance second thoughts he felt he had advanced too far to recede, and that there would be more peril in returning than in and that there would be more peril in returning than in advancing The whole army crossed the river on the 22nd, and encamped for the night in the grove of Plassy, in the immediate neighbourhood of which the Nabob was posted with an army of 12,000 horse and 85 000 foot, in an entrenched camp The next morning, the memorable 23rd of June, 1757, the Nabobs troops moved out and assaulted the English force which was sheltered by a high bank, but with little effect. About noon the enemy withdrew their artillery, and Chre advanced vigorously to the attack of their lines. Meer Mudun, the general m-chief, was mortally wounded, and expired in the presence of the habob, who was unable any longer to control his terror, but mounted a camel and fled at the top of its speed accompanied by about 2,000 horse His whole army immediately dispersed and this lattle, so, momentous in its eventual result on the destiny of India was graned with the loss of only 72 killed and wounded on the part of the Inclish, while, even on the side of the enemy, the casualties did not exceed 500 As soon as victory appeared to declare in feature of the I fighsh. Meer Jaffier moved off with his troops and pined their standard Sernia Dowlah, on his arrival at the capital, found himself deserted by his court, and, after passing a day in gloomy reflections, disguised lumself in a mean dress and escaped out of a window in the palace at ten at night, with a favourite conculuse and a cunuch, and embarl ed in a little boat which Irid been secured for him

250

Clive entered Moorshedal ad on the 29th of Floration of June, and proceeding to the palace, where all the great officers were assembled, conducted Meer Jaffier to the throne, and saluted him Soobadar of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa The change in the position and projects of the Luglish was so rapid and stupendous as almost to exceed belief In June, 1756 Calcutta had been plandered and burnt, its European inhabitants murdered and the Company exterminated from Bengal In June, 1707, they had recovered their capital, extinguished their Furopean rivals, defeated and dethround the Nal ob and disposed of the government of the three provinces, with a population of twenty five millions, to their own partizan In accordance with the terms of the treaty, the sum of two crores and twenty lacs of rupecs was gradually paid out of the treasury at Moorshedabad, to make good the losses of the Company and of individuals The first instalment of eighty lacs was conveyed to Calcutta in a tri umphant procession with lands playing and banners floating -a bright contrast to the spectacle of the previous year when Seraja Dowlah marched back to his capital with the plunder of Calcutta While Chre was thus giving away a were paraded on an elephant through the streets, and then buried in the tomb of his grandfather.

The Court of 282

Intelligence of the destruction of Calcutta did not reach England for eleven months On the Directors on I lassy 1757 3rd of August, 1757, the Court of Directors wrote to the President in Calcutta: "On the 4th of June, we heard of the melancholy news of the loss of Fort William and the rest of our settlements in Bengal On the 22nd day of July, Mr Holwell arrived on the Siren, and gave a most agreeable turn to our thoughts by bringing advice of the recapture of Fort William " A few months after, they heard of the battle of Plassy, and the great revolution which had been effected by their troops That victory more than realised the expectations which the Court had entertained seventy years ago, when they sent out Admiral Nicholson to make them "a nation in India" It had laid the foundation of a great empire Yet so little conception had the Court of the high destiny which was opening before them that their chief source of gratification was derived from the hope that their servants in Bengal would now be able to provide the investment for two years without drawing on them The first object of Meer Jaffier, after his eleva-

Clive quells

three revolts, tion, was to plunder the Hindoo minister of finance, Roy-doorlab, and the officers who had amassed wealth in the governments conferred on them by

Ah verdy. These proceedings provoked no fewer than three revolts within three months, in Behar, Purneah, and Midnapore But they were quelled without bloodshed, by the mere exercise of Chye's influence, to whom the whole country looked up as to a demigod The ascendancy which he thus acquired, though inseparable from his position and his genius, could not fail to lessen the importance of the Nabob, and to irritate his mind, while it gave umbrage to his family and his officers They could not forget that it was only two years since the foreigners, who now bore the supremacy in Bengal, had approached them as suppliants, with gifts and flattenes, and it required the most delicate management on the part of Cive to prevent the explosion of their discontent. A few months after the battle of Plassy, a Mahratta envoy arrived at Moorshedabad to demand the arrears of chost now due for two years, but he soon found that the days of chost had ceased with the advent of the English.

Expedition to The Court of Directors, our hearing of the great the coat 'esp victory of Plassy, placed the government of Calterner 1 58. cutta in the hands of Chve, and he was anxious to afford substantial relief to Madras, now menaced by Lally, but the presence of a formidable French force on the confines of Orissa, and of Law with 200 Europeans on the borders of Behar, combined with the growing alienation of the Nabob, made it impolitic to weaken Bengal The number of European troops at Madras was, moreover, twice as large as the number at the disposal of Chye, and, above all, that settlement had Lawrence for its military commander, which Clive considered an ample guarantee of its safety. He, therefore, supplied it most liberally with funds from his own full treasury, and took steps to remove one cause of disquetude by an attack on the French possessions in the Northern Sircars, now no longer protected by the genus of Bussy He entrusted the expedition to Colonel Forde, one of the great soldiers created by the long continued wars on the Coast Clive had begun to enlist the Rajpoots, and was enabled to send 2 000 sepoys emist the Rajpoots, and was enabled to send 2 000 sepoys with Fords, in addition to 500 Europeans and 14 guns That officer landed at Vizagapatam, and, after defeating Bussy's feeble successor, the Marquis of Conflans, formed the bold design of laying siege to Masulpatam, the great stronghold of the French on the coast, though it was garm-soned by a larger force than that of the besegrey Conflans soluted the immediate and of the Nizam, Salabut Jung, who marched down to the season with the salability of the season when the season with the salability of the season when the salability of the salability down to the coast with a large army in support of his friends Forde, however, pushed the siege with such skill and energy as to oblige the French general to capitalate before the

just as it arrived within sight of Chinsurah, and defeated in half an hour Immediately after the action, the Nabob's son, Meerun, appeared with an army of 7,000 men, who were destined to turn on the English if the fortune of the day had been different. Clive restored the vessels he had taken to the Dutch authorities, on their engaging to make good all texpose incurred in defeating their plans, and embarked for England on the 25th of February, 1760 We now resume the thread of Mahratta and and tie Mahrat Mogul affairs Ahmed Shah Abdalee returned to tas, 1757-69 Persia in June, 1707, leaving his son, Timur, in charge of the Punish, and Nuiceb ood dowlah in command at Della, to protect the emperor from the designs of Ghazee ood-That profugate minister called the Mahrattas to his aid, and Raghoba, the fighting brother of the Peshwa, marched up to Dollu, and captured it after a month's segs Nujeeb retreated to Rohilcund, and Ghazec ood deen was re-instated in the office of vizier. Soon after the capture of the capital by Raghoba, one Adina beg, a veteran intriguer in the Punjab, invited him to seize on that province, as well as Mool tan, and annex them to the Mahratta dominions He marched to Lahore, in May, 1758, the Abdalees were totally routed. Prince Timur retreated to Persia, and the Mahratta standard was planted, for the first time, on the banks of the Indus marked the return of the Mahratta expeditions, brought back a load of obligations little short of a crore of rupces. This disappointment gave use to a serious altercation with Suda seeb Rao Bhao, the cousin and civil administrator of the Peshwa "Then take charge of the next expedition yourself was the tart reply of Ragloba. The Peshwa tool Im at his word and compromised the differences between them by transferring the command of the army to Sudasecb, generally known as the Bhro, and placing his Irother at the head of the civil department.

Raghoba then returned to the Deccan but with more glory than money, and, instead of the leads of booty which usually

The Peshwa had been, for some time, engaged Territory wrested from Salabut in intrigues for the acquisition of Ahmednugur, Jung 1758 the most important city south of the Nerbudda, and, at length obtained possession of it by an act of base treachery This aggression brought on hostilities with Salabut Jung and his brother, Nizam Ali, who had been recently reconciled to him The master spirit of Bussy no longer animated the councils or the army of the Negam | Ibrahim Khan Gardec, one of the ablest native generals of the time, who was in command of the scropy battalions trained by Bussy, and a powerful and well served artillery, had been dismissed from the service. He immediately transferred his sword to the Peshwa, and, in the conflict now raging, contributed, in no small degree, to reduce Salabut Jung and his brother to such straits, that they were constrained to submit to the most humiliating conditions as the price of safety. A treaty was wrung from them, which conceded to the Mahrattas five of the most important fortresses in the Deccan, and some of its most flourishing districts, yielding a revenue of not less than sixty lacs of rupees a year The Mahrattas had now reached Power of the the zenith of their power Their authority was Mabratian, 1789 equally acknowledged on the banks of the Cavery and the Indus All the territory within these limits, which was not their own, paid them tribute. The vast resources of the Mahratta community were guided by one head and directed to one object-the aggrandisement of the nation, and they now talked proudly of establishing Hindoo sovereignty over the whole of Hindostan The only hope of pre-serving the country from subjection to this power, of which tyranny, range, and destruction were the constant attendants. now rested on the arms of a foreign potentate-Ahmed Shah Abdalee

Rough to a lad left Mull ar Rão Holkar and Dataof Abmel Shan, peo Sindia to extort contributions from the Lappoot 132 princes, and to maintain the conquests to Lad malo in the Punjab At the instigation of Ghazee god deen. Sand a sent his officers to invade Polulcund, and in the course of a month they laid waste thirteen hundred villages in that flurishing province. The ulterior of ject of the vizer and of the Mahrattas was the possession of Oude, and as the Nabob draded them more than he hated the Robillas, he entered into a treats with Hafiz Ruhmut, the linest of their cluefs, and, in conjunction with Nujech ood dowlah drove Sindia across the Garges with great slaughter Just at this juncture both parties were astounded by the intelligence that Ahmed Shah was entering India with a grand army to recover and extend his conquests. The remembrance of the sack of Della by his troops gave a portentous character to this, his fourth invasion, and the Nat ob and the Mahratta were in duced, ly a common alarm, to patch up an accommodation The Ablilee crossed the Indus in September, 1759, and marched direct to I abore During his advance, the vizier, who had derrived his former master of sight, dreading the intercourse of the emperor with Alimed Shah, on whom he Munter of the felt that he had inflicted inext table injury, gave enjeror A m orders for his assassination, and placed some geer Nov. 1750 ut known youth on the throne, who was however never acknowled red

The two Mahratta chiefs, supported by their allies, the Jauts, advanced to encounter Ahmed Shah, but they were in Defeat of undia two divisions widely separated from each other, and Holkar and he resolved to attack them before they could form a junction The army of Sindia was sur prised, and two thirds of the troops, including the general, slaughtered. Holkar made all haste to retreat, and might have escaped but he could not resist the temptation of turn ing out of his way to plunder a rich couvoy of which he had received intimation Ahmed Shah overtook him by forced marches of extraordinary length and routed him with creat carnage Of these reverses the Peshwa received information. namediately after he and his cousin had succeeded in wresting the forts and districts already mentioned from Salabut. The infantry should be left in his forts, and that the army should revert to the old system of warfare, and harass the enemy with incessant attacks and cut off his supplies, till the hot season obliged the Abdulee to withdraw his troops to a more congemal chimate beyond the Indus But this sage advice, though supported by the ablest of the Mahratta generals, was rejected with scorn by the Bhao The city of Dellu was occupied almost without a struggle, and he was with difficulty dissuaded from proclaiming Wiswas Rao, the cldest son of the Peshwa, Emperor of India But, in a spart of wanton barbarity, he destroyed the monuments of art which even Nadir Shah had spared Disgusted with these acts, and not less with the overbearing conduct of the Bhao, the Ralpoots and the Jauts withdrew from his army.

Movements of the Mahrattas and Morrela

Ahmed Shah was cordully supported by the Robillas, and with less zeal by the Nabob of Oude His regular army consisted of 38,000 foot and 41,800 horse, with seventy pieces of artillery His irregular force was computed to be equally strong After a variety of managuvres the two armies confronted each other on the field of Paniput, where for the third time the fate of India was to be decided The Bhao entrenched lumself behind a ditch, forty feet wide and twelve feet deep Ahmed Shah fortified his camp with felled trees Numerous encounters took place from time to time between different detachments without any decisive result. The Robillas and the Nabob of Oude were impatient to be led at once against the enemy, but the wary and experienced Abdalee prudently determined to wait the certain progress of famine in their encampment The resources of the Mahrattas were gradually exhausted, their foraging parties were constantly driven back, and starvation stared them in the face, while the stench from the dead bodies of men and animals within the narrow limits of the camp became at length insupportable. Unable any longer to bear these privations and evils, men and officers equally demanded, in a voice of Rao was found, and the Abdalee was with reluctance prevaled on to allow it to be burnt, instead of having it died and stuffed, to take back with him to Cabul Junkaje Sudfa and the illustrious Ibrahim Khan Gardee, were tal en prisoners and put to death, the latter on the ground of having fought on the side of the Hindoos against the true believers Ouly one fourth of the troops escaped, and the entire loss of the Mahratta, from the beginning of the campaign, was computed at 200 000 Never was defeat more complete or more fatal. There were few furniles which had not lost some relative, and grief and despondency overspread the community. The Peshwa died of grief, and with him perished the prestige of his family. The formidable unity of the Mahratta power was destroyed, and the hope which the Mahratta had chenshed of becoming masters of all India, was at once and for ever annihilated.

CHAPTER XI

BENGAL, 1761—1772

Condition of In 1 a after the batt co I and put, 1761

The battle of Paniput forms an important epoch in the modern annals of India, and a brief notice of the position and strength of the vanous princes at that period will serve to cluedate its thistory. The creat energy of the Marylla will subsequent history The great empire of the Moguls was dissolved, and the emperor was wandering about in Belair, accompanied by a small band of mercentres. In the districts around Dellu the Jauts on one side, and the Lehilas on the other, were consoliditing the power they had usure of Tie Rapport rajas had been humbled during the encroachments of the Mahratras and manifested little of their former energy. The Nabob sizer of Oude possessed a rich territory, and a large undisciplined army, but was deficient in every military quality, except courage cuppre in India under a Hindos sceptre, had been dissipated by the recent defeat, and although the Peshwa was still the head of the federation, its power was henceforth partitioned among the Guickwar, the raja of Nagpore, and Holkar and Sindia, who were seldom at peace with each other. The Nizam at Hyderabad, had been crippled by the surrender of some of his most valuable districts to the Mahrattis The power of the French was completely broken. In the south of the pennisula, the Nabob of the Carantic had been scated on the throne by the English, and was maintained solely by their arms, and Hyder Al was on the point of grasping the supreme control in Mysore. The power destined eventually to bring these various principalities 'under one umbrella,' had recently subdued its European rivals in the south, and established its predominance in the valley of the Gangos, but was contemplating nothing so little as the conquest of India

Clive had become so completely identified with Vasa tark.

Give had become so completely identified with Governord the existence of British power in Bengal, that his scar 1 set if departure appeared to those who remained, as if the soul was departing appeared to those who remained, as if the soul was departing from the government. He was succeeded in the-chair by Mr. Vansittart, a Madras civilian, a min of the greatest probity, but utterly incompetent to manage the compleated machinery of the government. The aju nitment, though recommended by Gius, proved in every respect disastrons. The members of the Bengal Council were irritated by his intrusion into a soat which they considered to blong to them of right, and set themselves to thwart his measures, at a period when the exigencies of a novel and forcing administration required the greatest main mity. Soon after Mr. Vansittart's appointment, moreover, an order from the Court of D rectors in ache l'Oclutta summanily dismissing three of the ablest and most experienced majules of Council, on account of a contumneous setter which had been provoked by their own arbitrary proceedings. The opponents of ble Vansittart thus obtained a majority in the Council, and this circumstance, combined with his imbecility, rendered the four years of his administration a period of extraordinary criminality.

Invasion of Rehar by the Shah zada, 1760

The Shah Zada, the son of the emperor, invaded Behar a second time at the beginning of 1760, with the rabble of troops he had collected

As already stated, the intelligence of his around hum father's death reached him after he had crossed the Curumnussa, and he immediately assumed the imperial dignity with the title of Shah Alum, which brought a large accession of troops The Nabob of Onde was appointed vizier of to his standard this relic of an empire, and, in the hope of adding Behar to his territories, joined the emperor with a considerable force Colonel Calliand, one of the generals created by the wars on the coast, the commade of Lawrence and Clive, of Coote and Forde, had been sent up from Madras to take the command of the army in Bengal, and had proceeded to Moorshedabad, where Clive, then on the eve of embarking for England, was making the necessary dispositions for repelling the invasion Meer Juffer contributed 15,000 horse to the expedition under the command of his son, Meerun, whose oppressions had made even Seraja Dowlah an object of regret. The united forces of the emperor and the vizier advanced towards Patna on one side, while Colonel Calhaud was moving up in an opposite direction to its succour Ramnaravun, the Hindoo governor, had been strictly enjoined to await the arrival of these reinforcements, but he chose to march out and encounter the enemy alone, and was totally defeated. The city must have surrendered at discretion, if it had been immediately invested, but the emperor wasted the precious moments in plundering the district On the 20th of February, Colonel Calliaud cam; up with the emperor, and, notwithstanding the misconduct of Meerun's horse, completely routed his army

The Emperor marches to 3 combedated

The emperor had received the promise of assistance from the Muhrattis, and made a sudden and rand march through the hills on Moorshedalad

XIT BATTLE OF PATA, GAINED BY CAPT KNOX.

to meet them. Calhand lost no time in following his steps. and the two armies confronted each othersabout thirty miles from that city But the emperor, hearing nothing of his alies, abruptly broke up his camp and marched back to Patna, to which he laid close siege for nine days All hope of prolonging the defence was fading away, when Captain Knox, who had advanced from Bengal by forced marches to its rescue, at the hottest season of the year, was descried approaching it with a small force The following day the two armies met, and the emperor was defeated, and his force dis-The Nabob of Purneah, who had been for some time intriguing with the emperor, now advanced to his assistance with 30,000 men and thirty pieces of cannon Captam Knox, to the utter amazement of the natives of Patna, immediately cro sed the Ganges to oppose his pro cress with a handful of men not exceeding a battalion of sepoys and 200 Europeans, and a small squadron of cavalry The native historian of that period vividly describes the breathless anxiety with which the inhabitants crowded on the walls to watch the issue of this desperate encounter. It was one of those battles in the early career of the English which gave prestige to their arms, and bewildered the native princes. It lasted six hours, and ended in the total defeat of the enemy The result of the conflict was rendered the more grateful to the natives by the extraordinary valour displayed by one of their own country, raja Shitabroy, and by the high encomum bestowed on him by the English commander, as they entered the city together covered with dust Colonel Call and and Meerun soon after arrived at Patus, and procueded acro s the river to follow up the victory But they had not marched far when Meerun, as he lay on his couch hatening to a tale, was struck dead by a thunderbolt, and the Death of country was nd of a monster, in whose cubinet whom he had doorned to destruction on his

The vigour of Meerun, in spite of his profligacy, Monr Jaffler d pose 1 1 00 had been the mainstry of the government of Moorshedabad, and his death brought on an immediate erisis Meer Juffier lost the little reason he ever possessed, and the administration fell into a state of complete anarchy The troops surrounded the palace, and demanded the arrears of their 13 with loud menaces, when Meer Cresum, the Nabobs son in Jaw, came forward and offered to satisfy their claims from his own funds, on condition of being appointed the successor of Meerun. The Nabob accepted his terms and his services, but, in an evil hour, sent him to Calcutta, to make pecuniary arrangements, in his name, with the Council They had an expensive war on their hands, without a rupee in their exchequer. The treasure accumulated at Moorshedabad had been exhausted, and, in the confusion and scrumble of the times, no thought had been bestowed on the future The imbecile Meer Jaffier was not the man to remove their embarrassments, on the other hand, Meer Cassim appeared to possess great talent and energy Mr Holvell, who had taken the command of Fort William when it was deserted by Mr Drale, was the invoterate enemy of Meer Jaffier, and urged his colleagues at once to determine ou deposing him, and elevating his son in law to the throne After a show of hesitation, the members of the Council adopted his advice, and Mr Vansittart was requested to proceed to Moorshedabad with 180 Europeans, 600 sepoys, and four guns, to persuade Meer Jaffier to resign the government of the three soobalis. The old man refused to abdicate, and threatened to appeal to Chive, his friend and protector, but the arguments of Mr Vansittart were irresistible, and he was obliged to submit to his fate, only stipulating for a safe asylum in Calcutta well knowing that in India deposition meant death . Meer Cassim became soobadar, and, as Meer Cassim Decame doubt of the Price of his elevation, coded to the Company the three districts of Midnapore Chittagong and Buidwan, which were then estimated to furnish a third of the

to the Tower proof muskets; he established a foundry for easting cannon, and trained up a corps of artillerymen who would have done credit to the Company's service Notlings was wanting to render Meer Cassim more powerful than Aliverdy Khan had ever been, but a few years of undisturbed leasure

Transactions wit 1 the emperor 1761 The emperor, Slinh Alum, unable to regain his capital, lifegreed within the limits of Behar with a horde of traces, which mosted the distracts like a horde of troops, which wasted the districts like a flight of locusts As soon, therefore, as the rains of 1761 had subsided, Colonel Carnac marched to Gya with an English force and dispersed them Law, the French general, whose little band of Europeans had been the chief support of the prince, was taken prisoner on this occasion. The distinguished courtesy with which he was treated by the English commander, confounded the ideas of the natives, who expected that he would have been led out to immediate execu tion, in accordance with the practice of oriental warfare "Nothing," exclaims the native historian in his remark on this circumstance, "can be more modest and becoming than the behaviour of these strangers, whether in the heat of action, or in the pride of success" After the action, Colonel Carnac sent raja Shitabroy with a conciliatory message to the emperor, which was cordially welcomed, and he was conducted with suitable honours to Patna Meer Cassim felt no little alarm on hearing of this friendly intercourse between the English commander and his own liege sovereign, and hastened to the English camp, but sullenly refused to pay his respects to the emperor Colonel Carnac obviated his object tions by bringing the parties together in his own tent, when Shah Alum received the homage of the nabob, and conferred on him the office of soobadar of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, and obtained in retifra the promise of an annual payment of twenty four lacs of rupees The emperor then proceeded on his route to Delhi, and, on taking leave of the colonel, made an offer to the Company of the dewanny of the three provinces.

Spol ation of Earmarayum, 1762. One of the earliest objects of Meer Cassum after his elevation was the spoliation of the great pro vincial officers, who had amassed wealth in their respective governments Ramparayun, the Governor of Patna. was destined to be the first victim, but the Council in Calcutta had pledged their honour to protect him from the designs of his enemies, and the Nabob was for a time baffled. But Mr Vansitart yielded at length to his importunities, Colonels Coote and Carnac, who insisted on keeping faith with Ram naravun, were removed from the province, and Meer Cassim was left to wreak his vengeance on him The unfortunate governor was immediately seized and despoiled, while his subordinate officers were pursued with all the ardour of cupidity, and tortured to disclose their wealth. Of all the proceedings of the feeble Vansittart, this was considered the most baneful, masmuch as it destroyed the confidence which the natives had hitherto reposed in the protection of the Company's officers, and strengthened the hands of the Nabob. whose hostility to the English was daily becoming mon. palpable

Meer Caesim had made great progress in con The transit solidating his government, when a storm was rai ed by the upprincipled conduct of the Council board in Calcutta, which eventually swept him from the throne From the days of Munoo, the duties levied on the transit of mer chandise through the country had formed one of the principal sources of the public revenue, and the highways of commerce, both by land and by water, were obstructed by Under the old imperial firmans, the goods of engtom houses the Company intended for export by sex were allowed to pass duty free, when protected by the dustuck, or permit of the But the battle of Plassy transferred the power President of the state to the Company, that is, to their servants, and they rushed eagerly into the inland trade of the country and cla med the same exemption from duty for their cwn goods, which in I been conceded to the merchandse of it car mas era,

BIR VANSITTAPT'S CONVENTION. Their servants and dependants soon came to demand the same privileges for their own adventures. The native merchants, morrover, anxious to pass their goods duty free, were led to .

fonte.

200

purchase du tucks from some of the Company's servants, even at a high premium, and the boys in the service, with less pry than fifty rupees a month, were enabled to realise an income of 15,000 or 20,000 rupees a year. To merease the confusion, any native trader wha wished to evade the duties, had only to hoist the English nishan, or flug, on passing a customhouse. In every instance in which this symbol of impunity was not respected, sepoys were sent to drag the Nabob's officers as culprits to the nearest factory, and they soon came to understand the danger of offering the slightest resistance to the most glaring frauds. The Nabob was deprived of his revenues; the entire trade of the country was disorganised, and nothing appeared on every side but the most perious confusion.

xi.] INIQUITOUS CONDUCT OF THE BENGAL COUNCIL. • Old sidered themselves musters of the country, it appeared intolerable that their commercial agents should be subjected to the authority of one whom they had themselves raised to the throne, and to the insolence, as they deemed it, of his servants. All the members of Council at the out stations were called down to Valentia, to overswe the President, and they declared that they would pay no higher duty than two and a half per cent, and that on the article of salt alone. The Nabob, incensed by this declaration, determined to place his own subjects and the foreigners dates, 1 c. upon an equality by abolishing all transit dutes throughout the country. The members of Council voted this measure a crime, and demanded, as a matter of right, that the native trade should be subject to the usual duties, while measure a crime, and demanded, as a matter of right, that the native trude should be subject to the usual duties, while their own was exempted from them. It was in vain that Mr Vansitart raised his voice against this iniquitous doctrine, he was supported only by Mr. Hastings. From words the Council at length cume to blows, and Stanlake Batson one of its most turbulent members, denounced Mr. Hastings as a partizan of the habob, and struck him a blow which led to a hostile challenge. After having presed this diagraceful resolution, it to the habob at Monghir.

Line is the habob at Monghir. During these transactions a bost proceeding to

It to the Nabob at Monghir

In Einstein Learning these transactions a bort proceeding to keep re son Patra with conceiled arms, was searched and deserger son Patra with conceiled arms, was searched and deserger son Patra with conceiled arms, was searched and deserger to the conceiled arms, was searched and deserger to the conceiled arms, was searched and deserger to the following the company in that city were unfortunately at this uncertaint under the direction of Mr Ellis one of the most unseruptions and leadstrong of all the public servants. He had violently opposed it e elevation of Meer Cassim, and seemed now to be auxious to precipitate a rupture with him. The bort was eventually released, but Mr Ellis continued his hostile preparations with so little, disquise that Weer Cassim thought fit to detain Mr Hay as a hostage for some of his own servants who had been sized, but Mr Amjatt was allowed to return to Calcutta. Mr Ellis watted for the day which had been fixed for their departure, and when he calculated that both of them were beyond the reach of the Nabob. seized on the city of Patna. The native commandant was * obliged to retire, but on hearing that the European soldiers were confused with honor, returned suddenly and recentured the town Mr Ellis and the English centlemen took refuge in their boats and proceeded up the river, but were overtaken and brought back prisoners to Patna The Nabob, incensed at this outrage, ordered every Englishman throughout his dominions to be seized, and Mr Amyatt, then on his way to Calcutta, having refused to surrender, was slain in the sculle

The Setts, the great bankers of Moorshedal ad, who were possessed of incredible wealth, and had manifested a favourable disposition to the English, were at the same time serzed and conveyed to Monghir

four hours, and, in the opinion of Chve, never did troops fight better than those of the Nabob At one period of the action, indeed, they penetrated the English lines and captured two guns, and victory appeared, for a time, likely to incline to them, but the gallantry of the Europeaus, and the steadness of the sepoys bore down all opposition, and the Nabobs troops were constrained to abandon all their guns and stores, and retreat to Oodwanulla

Ma sacre of the of rage, and he gave way to the ferocity of his English pri soners, 1 63. disposition Ramnarayun, the deposed governor of Patna, was cast into the river with weights attached to his neck Rain Raibullub, the former governor of Dacca, was put to death, with all his sons The Moorshedahad bankers were thrown into the Ganges from one of the bastions of the fort of Monghir One of their favourite servants, the faithful Chance, begged permission to share their fate, and when his request was denied, plunged into the river, determined not to survive them Early in the month of November, the English army carried the entrenched camp at Oodwanulla, and the Nabob fled to Patna But before his departure he ordered his officers to proceed to the house where his Luropean prisoners were confined, and put them to death without distinction They nobly replied that they were soldiers and not execu-tioners "Turn them out," they said, "with arms in their lands, and we will fight them to the death" But there was in the camp one Walter Raymond, who had been a serreant in the Franch service, and now, under the name of Sumron. hald a commission in the Nabolis army, who came forward and offered to do the bloody deed. The wretch proceeded to the house with a file of sol hers, and poured in volley after volley through the venetian windows upon the defenceless vicsons, arrough the veneral waves a point the occurrences vic-time, till forty-eight gentlemen—among shom was Wr Ell a —and 100 solhers by stricked on the floor. Patra was ca, tured on the 6th of November, and the campaign ended in four months by the flight of Meer Cassen to the court of tha

FOILAP THE EIPER SUPAR MUTINE Nabob vizier The vizier had fought by the side of Ahmed Shah Abdalee at Paniput, and, in the vzerni ches to Patna, 1764. language of the native historian, "considered himself a second Rustim" He determined to take advantage of the confusion of the times, and, six months after the termination of the war with Meer Cassim, marched down to Putna with a large but ill truned army It was an act of wanton aggression on his part, dictated by ambition and avance The emperor and the disinherited Nabob of Bengal joined his camp with a small body of followers. The Engl h army in the field was straitened for provisions, and retired to the city of Patna which was vigorously attacked on the 3rd of May, 1761 The assailants were repulsed, but not without great difficulty, and not before the close of the day. The 801.

Nabob vizier, after hovering about Patna for four weeks, retired to Buxur to encamp for the rains consisting of native officers, and found guilty The Major ordered four of them to be blown away from the guns, when four noble looking grenadiers came forward, and demanded to be the first to suffer, as they had always been the foremost in danger The European officers then reported that the sepoys had announced their firm resolution not to allow any further executions, but the unfinching communder loaded his guns with grape, placed his European soldiers to the intervals, and commanded the native battalions to ground arms, threatening to discharge the guns on them if a single man was seen to The scroys were awed by his resolution, sixteen more were blown away, the mutiny was quenched in their blood, and discurling was restored. This was the first of that series of mutines which broke out from time to time among the native suppoys-chiefly after a successful campaign, when they are least amenable to reason—and terminated in less than a century in the dissolution of the whole Bengul army Major Munro shewed his masters how the insubordination of s poys was to be dealt with, and there can be no doubt that if the same spirit and promptitude had been exhibited on every future emergency, the result would have been equally auspicious

This example of severity restored the discipline followers, of the army so effectually that within four months it he mutiny, Major Munro did not heartiste to it ad his troops against the Nabob vixer, who had been encamped for several mu with at Buxav with an army of 50 000 m. On the 23rd of October he was attacked and completely routed, and obliged to abandon his camp, with all its stores and 130 jecces of ea mo. The actory of Buxar was searth less important to the intensits of the Company than that of Plassy It d mod shed the power of the Vixer, Sooyah ood dowlah the only chief of any importance in the north. It made the Inglish masters of the entire will y of the Gaugus, from the Himalyun to the sex, and I head Himalyun to the sex, and I head Himalyun to to like we use with his tree ure to Bandily, and was, moreover, provided that this nefanous claim should be satisfied before any payment was made to the Company is treasury for the expenses of the war, which were met by the ingenious device of lending to the Government at an exorbitant rate of interest, the sums paid to individuals by the Aabob. The effrontery exhibited during these five years' of crime makes one blush for the honour of England, and the only relief to the mind is to be found in the consideration that it was an exceptional case.

These importunities, combined with the age and infirmities of the Nabob, hastened his end, Meer Jaffier and he expired in January, 1765 Then came the question of appointing his successor. The making of Nabobs had been, for seven years, one of the most lucrative employments of the Council, and the fourth opportunity which was now presented, was not to be neglected. Mr Van sittart had retifed from the chur, and was succeeded by Mr Spencer, a Bombay civilian, without either talent or probity The Court of Directors, exasperated by the imquity of their servants in Calcutta had issued pereini tory orders for the sur pression of the inland trade, and for the execution of "covenants," binding them not to receive presents from native princes. These injunctions reached Calcutta before the death of Meer Jaffier Mr Spencer and his colleagues, were, moreover, aware that Lord Chye was on the eye of embarking for Inda to root out abuses, no time was, therefore, to be lost in the appointment of another Nabob. The covenants were thrown aside, and \ujum ood-dowlah, the son of Meer laffier, was raised to the throne, and required to make donations to the members of the Council to the extent or twenty lies of rupees, as well as to sanction the inland trade. exempt from the payment of all duty

Cive, on his return to England in 1760, was a maintain received with great definition by the ling the 165.

maintain Mr. Pitt, and the nation, and honour i with an Irish peering The India House, hierare, pad homage to his talents and his success; but the Court of Directors was scarcely less demorrhized by intrigue and jobbery than the Council board in Calcutta by venality and rapacity, and Chive was speedily brought into collision with the leading faction, at the head of which was Mr Sullivan In 1707, Meet Juffler had ceded to the Company certain lands lying to the south of Calcutta, of the annual value of ten lacs of rupees, reserving to himself the quit-rent of three lacs a year Two years after, the Nabob manifested his gratitude for the services of Chive by making him a donation of the quit-rent, which he received for several years without interruption But Mr Sullivan and his party having gained the ascendancy in the Court of Directors in 1763, sent out orders to Calcutta, without any communication with Clive, to withhold the usual payment, assigning no other reason for this act of injustice than the cessation of all cordiality between him and the Court Clive was, therefore, obliged to file a bil in chancery for the recovery of his rights. But while this contest was raging, intelligence was received in London of the war with Meer Cassim, the massacre of the European prisoners, and the total disorganization of the government in Calcutta The proprietors of India stock stw with dismay the golden dreams of prosperity in which they had indulged vanishing away, and, in spite of the opposition of the Directors, resolved to send out the man to whom they owed all their greatness, to retrieve their affairs They determined al o to entrust the powers of government, which had hitherto I cen vested in a council of sixteen, to a select committee of five Clive was surrounded by friends and admirers, and in the enjoyment of an income of four lacs of rupees a year, there was therefore no inducement for him to return to India, but he hall been actuated throughout life by a high sense of duty. and he did not hesitate to accept the charge of a government which was justly described as "headstrong and corrupt, and lost to every sense of honour"

Chve landed at Calcutta on the 3rd of May, and found that the political dangers had passed off Meer Con 1 tion of Bengal 1 to. Cassum had been expelled from Bengal the Nabob vizier had been vanquished and the emperor was a surplant But there were other and more alarming perils to be en countere! Vast fortunes had been amasse! by "the most nefarious and oppressive conduct ever known in any age or country The power of the Company's servants had been employed in levying contributions on every class from the Nabob down to the lowest zemindir I ven the exaction of twenty lacs of rupees from the young Nabob on his elevation, in definice of the express orders of the Court of Directors, was openly avowed without a blush Luxury, corruption and debruchery pervaded every rank of the service, and threatened the dissolution of all government. Clive found Spencer, the governor, ' as deep in the mire as any other, and he felt himself justified in affirming that ' there were not five men of principle left at the Presidency ' The massacre of the English gentlemen by Sumroo had thinned the ranks of the civil service, many of the seniors had returned to England laden with plunder, and young men hal thus been pushed forward to posts of importance, with I tile julgment or experience, but influend with the most extravagant ex pectations by the success of the e who had preceded them Clives first duty was to enforce the execution of the cove nants which abolished the receipt of presents, but he was met on the threshold by an attempt to question the powers of the Select Committee, and an effort was male to brow bent him, but he soon reduced the refractory to silence by declaring that he would not allow his authority to be contro verted for a moment, and that he would peremptorily dr miss from the service every officer who refused to sign the cover nants Arangement white sable, white sable, upper provinces to d spose of the we ghty questive riner and tions which awayted his decision. He attributed the recent war with Meer Cassim to the impin

On the 25th of June, Chve left Calcutta for the

210

dence of Mr Vansittart, in advising him to form and discipline an army, and to reader it efficient by just and punctual pryment. To prevent the recurrence of this cause of anxiety, the Nabob of Moorshedabad was relieved of all responsibility for the military defence of the country, and of the management of the recent. The sum of diffracture less of ruice?

ment of the revenue The sum of fifty-three lacs of rupees a year was assigned him for the expenses of his court and the administration of justice. He received the proposal with ecstacy "Thank God,' he exclumed, "I shall now have as many dancing girls as I like" With regard to the Nabob vizier, he had invaded Beliar without the least provocation, on the mere impulse of capacity, but his power had been irretnevably crushed by the battle of Buxar, the capture of Lucknow, and a second defeat at Corah Seeing his fortunes desperate, he repured to the camp of General Carnac, and threw himself on the consideration of the English authorities His kingdom was forfeited by the laws of war and the usage of the country, but Chve evinced his moderation by restoring it to him, with the exception of the two districts of Corah and Allahabad, which were reserved for the emperor Such an instance of generosity in a victorious enemy was unknown in Indra, and excited emotions of the deepest gratitude The emperor, though he had appeared in arms against the English at the battle of Buxar, was gratified with the revenues of the two districts assigned to him, which, with the annual pay ment of twenty six loss of rupces from Bengal and Behar, for which he was likewise indebted to the kindness of the English chief, constituted his whole dependence The Devanny After the completion of these arrangements. As 12 16 Chro requested that the Dewanny of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, which the emperor had repeatedly offered to the Company, should be conferred on them by an imperial friman. The net was completed on the 12th of August, 1765, a memorable day in the political and constitutional history of British India. As a substitute for a throne, two dining tables were joined togother in Chro's tori, and covered with emperors of the control of the contro such a force that all the powers in Hindostan cannot detrue us of our possessions for many years,' little dreaming that within a few months, the existence of that power would be endangered by that very force. The military expenses had latterto scallowed up the resources of the Company. The army considered itself the most important department of the state and the commanders, in the pride of their position, had explored to imbue the native princes with the convict on that the power of the British government was lodged with them rather than with the civil authorities in Calcutta A few months more of Mr Spencers service administration would probally have rendered them masters of the country The officers had been in the habit of receiving an allowance called batta when they took the field Meer Jaffier, out of gratitude for his elevation, had increased the gratuity, and the army soon came to consider double batta as their right When the Court of Directors became responsible for the finances of the country, they resolved to discontinuo this extravagant allowance, but the officers resented any in terference with their interests, and the Council board was deterred by their imperiousness from carrying the orders into execution The abolit on of the double batta was enjoued on Clive when he was leaving England, and he lost no time, after his arrival, in announcing that it w uld cease after the 1st of January, 1766 The officers were little disposed to submit to a measure which affected even a captain's allowance to the extent of 1,000 rupees a month and those in the higher grades in a larger proportion. The announcement of the order was the signal for mutiny and a universal combination was formed to compel Clive to retract it A committee of secrecy was organized in each of the three brigades, and a fund created to reimburse officers for any loss they might sustain and to this fund the discontented and factious civilians in Calcutta contributed more than a lac and a lialf of rupces It was agreed that two hundred officers should throw up their comm snons on the same day, and as an example of all other commercial companies, in restricting their agents abroad to a mere pittance of salary, and allowing them to ele it out by private trade, and thus were the servants enriched at the expense of the masters. The same system was continued when the factory had expanded into a kingdom, and their servants entered on the government of provinces with unchecked power. The consequence was that from the governor to the youngest writer, from the general to the ensign, not excepting even the chaplains, all classes were busily engaged in commercial pursuits, which were rendered lucrative by the influence of their dominant position In April, 1761, the Court of Directors thought that the evil might be remedied, simply by ordering that the trade should cease, without proposing any compensation to their officers; but in a subsequent despatch they had the wisdom to modify this order by directing Clive to devise some equitable plan which should be satisfactory both to the government and the service. Chve felt that it was indispensable to the peace and prosperity of the country that the servants of the state should not be allowed to compete with the native dealers in every market, and equally indispensable to the integrity and efficiency of the public service that the officers of the government should not be left to starve in the midst of wealth which their position enabled them to grasp. He, therefore, established a Society for conducting a traffic in salt, on the principle of a monopoly, the profits of which, after a reservation of ten lacs of rupees a-year to the Company, should be divided among the servants of the Company according to their rank; the member of Council and the colonel receiving 70,000 rupees a-year, and the subordinate officers, civil and military, in due proportion. The scheme continued in operation for two years, and was then abolished by orders from home, which substituted in its stead a commission of twoand a-half per cent on the gross revenue of the provinces

312

Clives return to After a residence of twenty-two months in England, 1167 India, Clive was driven back to England by a

severe attack of disease. In the large transactions in which he had been engaged, involving the fate of great hingdoms, and the disposal of crores of rupees, he might easily have added fifty lacs of rupees to his fortune, but he returned to his native land poorer than he had left it It has fallen to the lot of few men to exercise so im portant and permanent an influence on the course of human affairs When he landed in Calcutta in 1757, he found the Company's factory in ruins, and their servants in exile By 1767, he had made the Company the sovereigns of twenty five milions of people, and masters of a revenue. httle short of one half that of England. He had laid the foundation of a great empire containing an irrepressible element of expansion He had established the supremacy of Europe in Asia His reception in England corresponded at first with his eminent merits, but it was not long before be was made to taste the bitterness of ingratitude His greatness excited envy and censure The members of the civil service, whose rapacity he had defeated abroad, made large purchases of India stock on their return to England, and became members of the corporation in Leadenhall street, that they might more effectually wreak their vengeance on him His rancorous enemy, Sullivan, endeavoured by garbled statements to persuade Parliament that all the difficulties of the Company were to be attributed to his measures. The Court of Directors restored almost every civil and military culprit whom he had cashiered for peculation or mutiny Attorney General proposed to confiscate all the donations he had received from native princes in India, and the Prime Minister joined the hue and cry against him In Parlia ment his conduct was described by his opponents "as a mass of the most unheard of villances and corruption ' But when a vote of censure was pressed on the House, the members shrunk from the scandal of tixing a brand of infamy on the man who had given England a kingdom larger than itself, and came to the resolution that he had rendered great and mentorious services to his country But his lofty spirit could ill brook the persecution he had been subjected to, and under hear of the pressure of bodily and mental suffering, here the interpretation of the properties of the pr

Lord Chve was succeeded in the government Wretched con by Mr Verelst, a man of strict integrity, but d on of ikn without sufficient resolution to cope with the disorders of the times . Chie, with all his genius, had committed the great error of establishing the system of double government, which for five years proved to be the curse of The administration was nominally vested in the Nabob, in whose name the revenue was collected and justice administered, by native officers, but the uresistible power of the rapacious servants of the Company paralysed the whole system of government, and introduced endless intrigue and oppression Those whom Chie had constrained to sign the covenants against presents, treated them as waste paper as soon as his bick was turned, and plunged with increased ardour and perfect impunity into the trade of the country Fvery man who was permitted to make out a bill, made a fortune and the nefamous charges of contractors, commissines engineers, and other officers drained tile treasury The Council was without the power, even if they had possessed the will, to check these abuses. The three natives who managed the revenues enriched themselves, and left the governor to borrow money for the public service. It was at this period, and through their connivance, that the great majority of rent free tenuris was created, and an annual revenue little short of forty lies of rupees was alienated from the resources of the state. It was a period of transiti n Letween the dissolution of the old Milhomedan government and the vigorous development of British sovereignts, and it was as usual "fruitful of anomalies, and not wanting in gult These evils were aggrevated to a fearful extent 11 tle great famine of 1770, which sweet away one third of the population of the lower provinces.

CHAPTER XII

PROCRESS OF EVENTS AT MADRAS AND BOMBAY, 1761-1772

Specialize To return now to the progress of events at the Madras Presidency The extinction of the French power in India by the capture of Pondicherry, had given Mahomed Ali, the ally of the English, the undisputed title of Nalvob of the Carnatic, and, though he had afforded them no assistance during the war, he regarded himself as the absolut ruler of the country But he was conspicuous even among the princes of India for his imbecility, and his army was a mere ral ble, which devoured the resources of a territory they were unable to protect The Company thus found themselve. by the issue of the war, saddled with the defence of a province comprising 50,000 square miles without any re sources for the maintenance of a costly army, but the profits of their trade, which belonged to their constituents in London They were constrained, therefore, to demand a contribution of fifty lacs of rupees from Mahomed All to discharge the obligations they had contracted during the recent conflict But the Carnatic had been without any settled government for twenty years, every invader had desolated its districts. and the polygars paid no revenue but at the sword's point. The country was moreover, now in the hands of a court at once wasteful and neglectful, which had been subsisting for many years on loans raised on exorbitant terms at Madras, which impaired the strength of those who borrowed the money and the morals of those who lent it To meet this demand the Nabob proposed to

Action of tan To meet this demand the Nabob proposed to the government of Madras to despoil the government of Madras to despoil the government of States and finore particularly the raph of Tanjore, who e principality had, to a certain extent, escaped the ravages of yar and which he was anxious to as propriate to himself Tanjore was an independent province,

Iacd the Nizum at Tripety, but he had no mind to try conclusions with them, and instantly evacuated the country During these events, Clive happened to touch at Madras or his way to Calcutta, and was requested by the Nabob to ootan a firman from Della, relevang him from dependence on the Nizam, and on the 12th of August in the same year, Mahomed Ali was empowered by the emperor's sunnad to hold his fied directly of the imperial crawh in the districts coded to Colonel Forde by Salabut Jung in 1758 The Madras President had, at one time, offered to farm them of the \izam at a high rent, but the proposal was declined. Chve, however, during his second administration, disposed of the question in a very summary manner On the memorable 12th of August, when he received the Dewanny from the emperor, he likewise requested an imperial grant of the Northern succars for the Company, which was necessarily granted The Nizam, who had already lost his hold on the Carnatic, was not disposed tamely to part with this province likewise, and on hearing that an English force had been sent to take possession of the districts, threatened to march down and exterminate them, and also made preparations for the invasion of the Carnatic. The timid Presidency of Madras. alarmed at these menaces, directed their commander, General Calliand, to suspend all military operations, and proceed to Hyderabad to enter into negotiations with the Nizam Treat with the They resulted in the disastrous and humiliating treaty of the 12th of November, 1766, by which S ram. I'mb the Madras authorities agreed to hold the Northern sincars, which had been conferred on them by the paramount power in India, as a tributary tenure under the Nizam at eight lacs of rupices a year, and, in addition, to make an immediate donation of five lass. But what was still more objectionable, the President involved the Company in the intricate web Concern politics, by engaging to furnish the Nizara with two, buttalious of infantry and six pieces of cunnon, "to settle, in everything right and proper, the affairs of his highness's government," well knowing that the first requisition for the troops would be to assist in attacking Hyder Ah, who had recently usurped the Mysore throne, and against whom a confederacy had been formed of the Mahrattus and the Nizam

We turn, therefore, to the rise and progress of Lies of this extraordinary chief, who proved, eventually Hyder All. to be the most formidable and inveterate for the English ever encountered in India The principality of Mysore was one of the provinces of the Hindoo kingdom of Beejuynugur, which was extinguished on the field of Tellicotta in 1561 In the confusion created by this event, it fell to the lot of a Hindeo prince, whose descendants continued, for two cen turies, to maintain their independence and to encroach on their neighbours. About the year 1750, the old dynasty having become effecte, the whole power of the state fell into the hands of the minister. Numera: It was at this juncture that Hyder appeared on the scene, and, in a few years, super seded both ling and minister. His family came originally from the Punjab, and his father, Futteh Mahomed, gradually rose to be a sirdar of peons, or head constable, and then obtained the command of a small body of troops Hyder was born about the year 1702, and, as he advanced in years, give himself up to the pleasures of the chase, and plunged into voluptuous riot Like Sevajee, he was never able to read or write, but this deficiency was in some measure supplied by an extraordinary memory He remained in complete obscurity during forty seven years of his life, and first entered the Mysore army as a volunteer at the siege of Deonhully, where his energy and self possession attracted the notice of Nunterar

The formitation of his fortune, 1 55

The minister immediately promoted him to the command of 50 horse and 200 infantry, with instructions to augment their number, and it was a soon which laid the foundation of his future fortune this commission which laid the foundation of his future fortune In 1755, the difficult task of providing for the safety of the fortress of Dindigul, lying to the south of Trichinopoly, was committed to him, and it was while in command of this post that he appears first to have entertained those ambitious views which he was enabled to bring to a consummation in the brief space of six years Dindigul became the cradle of his power, and it was there that he increased his resources by a system of plunder, of which there had been no example since the days of Seragee. His troops were let loose indis-criminately on every one, friend or foe, who had anything to lose, and their zeal was sharpened by permission to retain half the booty for themselves. Hyder's progress to power was aided in no small degree by his unrivalled power of dissimulation Having on one occasion reported a great victory to Nungeral, that minister sent his commissity to bestow the usual pensions for wounds, when 700 men were exhi bited to him, wrapped in bin lages which had been steeped in turmenc, whereas only 67 had been wounded. By similar acts of deceit, and by the repetition of false musters, he was enabled to obtain large supplies of money, and to increase his force to 7,000. At the same time, he procured skilled artizans from the French settlements on the coast, and established an arsenal and a laboratory, and brought has art flery to a high degree of perfection became mutinous for their arrears Hyder hastened to the capital, and engaged to satisfy their claims, on receiving the assignment of fresh jaygeers. By this politic act he increased his resources, and at the same time obtained an influence over the troops, and all classes began to regard him as the guardian of order Soon after, he persuaded the minister to expel the Mahratta officers from the districts which had been pledged to the Peshwa, who immediately entered the country with a large force Hyder was appointed to the command of the Mysore army, and harassed the Mahrattas in their own style of warfare, with so much effect that they offered to relinquish the mortgaged territory for an immediate payment. Hyder raised the money from the bankers of the city on his own personal security, and the districts were transferred to lum. Then came fresh mutinicaand the raja and the minister were besigned in their palaces Hyder was at hand to satisfy the troops and received fresh assignments, till he found himself in possession of half the domains of the state Lally was at this time besieged by Coote in Hyder as: sta

Pondicherry, and solicited the aid of Hyder, who engaged to furnish him with 8,000 horse and foot and a due proportion of artillery, on being put in possession of the im portant fortress of Thiagur His relative and general, Mukdoom Ali, on his way to Pondicherry with the troops, fell in with a small English detachment, and defeated it. Hyder was so elated with this success, that he immed ately ordered the strength of his contingent to be doubled If this increased force had reached the French settlement while it was besieged, the war between the English and the French night have exhib ted a very different result But Hyder was suddenly obliged to recall the whole force for the protection of his own interests. His usurpation of authority had created great indignation at the court, and the queen mother and the raja, in conjunction with his bosom friend, Khundeh Rao, determined to take advantage of the absence of these troops to crush his rising power He was encamped under the fort of Sering postam with only 1,600 men, when the guns were anexpectedly opened on him, and he was obliged to fly for his hie He retreated to Bangalore, and recalled his troops from Pondicherry, but was overtaken and signally defeated by Chundeh Rao

Hyder recovers his nouros the Hyder's fortunes now appeared desperate, but they were restored by his matchless tact and fortunes, and hypocrisy Unarmed and alone, he suddenly prethrone, 1 al. sented himself before the minister. Numerau. acknowledged his ingratitude with an appearance of the deepest penitence, and entreated that he might be forgiven, and allowed to serve under him in any capacity, however Anniera; was so simple as to give faith to these professions and condone his offence, and Hyder was thus enabled to assemble an army, but Khundeh Rao still followed him with such vigour that his escape appeared impossible. In this emergency, he contrived to throw in the way of his pursuer letters addressed to his officers, with the seal of Nunieral, in which allusion was made to certain treacherous Khundeh Rao, considering himself betrayed by his own officers, quitted his army, and fled with precipitation to Senngapatam Hyder was now enabled to assemble a nowerful army, with which he ascended the ghauts, and on his arrival at the capital in May, sent a message to the rain statum, "that large sums were due to him from the state. which must be liquidated after which, if the raja thought fit to continue his services, it was well, otherwise he would depart and seek his fortune elsewhere' Such a message. backed by an overwhelming force, could not be misunderstood. The rain yielded to necessity, and in June, 1761, relinquished the government to Hyder Ab on receiving an assignment of lands of the annual value of three lacs of rupees for himself, and one lac for Nunjeraj Hyder, now master of the kingdom of Mysore, directed all his energies to its aggrandisement.

and in the course of two years extended his frontier to the banks of the Kistna In 1763, he invaded the terri tory of Bednore, on the summit of the ghauts, which over looked the maritime province of Canara The capital was eight miles in circumference, and the country had not been exposed to the desolation of war The queen set fire to h r palace, and fled with a large portion of the inhabi ants into the woods, and Belinore submitted without a struggle It is said to have been the most wealthy city in the Deccan, and the plunder which Hyder acquired has been estimated at twelve crores of rupees This sum is a manifest exaggeration, but he himself always attributed his subsequent pros perity to the treasure he acquired in this city He had previously changed his name from Hyder Naik to Hyder Ali Khan Bahadoor, and he now introduced greater etiquette and splendour into the arrangements of his court, and morcover took advantage of the access he had obtained to the sea coast, to commence the construction of a navv.

Access on at Manhoo Ran, To turn now to the progress of affairs among the Malrattas On the death of Balage Ran, after Feshwa, Series the fatal defeat at Paniput, his son, Madhoo Ran, a youth of eighteen, proceeded to Satarra, in com a youth of eighteen, proceeded to 'Satara, in company with his uncle, Rogheonath Rao, known in Britsh annils as Pughoba, and was invested with the office of Peshwal's the descendant of Sevajee, who was still held in confinement by his cruel grandmother, Tara-bye Nizam Ali the dowan or prime minister of his brother Salabut Jung, who had usurped the whole power of the Hyderabad hingdom resolved to take advantage of the crippled state of the Mahratas, and the confusion of a new rugh, to recover the district which the deceased Peshwa had wrested from him in the preceding year. He marched to Poona with a large army, but, en arriving within forfiteen miles of it, was in luced to relax his demands, and accept lands yielding twenty seven lace of rupees a year. Six months after, he placed his Irother under restraint, and not long after, when intelligence arrived that he had been recognised soobadar of the Deceau, by the peace of Paris, caused him to be put to death Before the ces ion of the districts was completed, the restless Raghoba sexambled his troops to oppose Nazam Ah, who immediately formed an alliance with Bhonslay, the raja of Berar, and marched agran to Poona which, on this occasion, he plundered and burnt. Raghoba retalated on him by marching to Hyderabad, and laying it under contributions. The two armies met on the banks of the Godavery. The faithless honslay was induced by the promise of lands.

Numanités Bhonsly was induced by the promise of lands, reseit pravalued at thirty two lacs of rupees a year, to exoch, tet. desert Nizam Ah, and join Raghoba, and the result of this treachery was the entire defeat of the Nizam with immense slaughter. The rais of Berar, however, was not long permitted to retain the fruits of his perfuly. He had incensed the Peshwa by joining Nizam Ah, and Nizam Ah by deserting to the Mahraty is on the eve of the buttle, and in 1766, the united armies of these princes invaded Berar, and constrained him to restore four-fifths of the territory he had gained by his treachery

gamed by his treachery

Mysore had hitherto been considered by the scheshaddeat Malmattas a submi sive province, paying chout, lipher 1565.

and affording a field for plunder when no other expedition happened to be on hand. The sudden rise and rap id encroachment of a new power roused the indignation of the Teshiwa and, having disposed of Nizam Ali, he deter mined to chastise the audacity of Hyder, who had already increused his force to 20 000 horse and 40 000 foot, one half of which consisted of well disciplined infantry battalions. It was his first regular encounter with the Malmattas, and he was completely folid in all his movements. At the close of the monsoon, the Vahrattas again took the field, and forced Hyder to a general action in which he was again routed, with the loss of 10,000 men. The Mahratta horse spread over the country and plundered it without mercy, and Hyder con

sid red himself fortunate in obtuning peace by the restora

326, CHAP. CONFEDERACY AGAINST HYDER.

tion of the greater portion of the districts he had usurped, and the payment of thirty-two lacs of rupees. These disasters shook his power in the other provinces he had recently conquered, and it required a full year to restore his authority. Early in 1766, his ambition led him to invade the maritime province of Malabar. The Nairs, or military chieftains, anxious to maintain their hereditary renown, and to preserve their independence, offered a noble resistance, but their chivalrous valour could not avert their fate, and the whole province was reduced to subjection. In his progress along the coast, Hyder reached the town of Calicut, memorable as the place where the Europeans first set foot on the soil of India. The district had never been invaded by the Mahomedan arms, and the Hindoo chief still bore the title of Zamorin, as in the days of Albuquerque. He was awed into submission by the overwhelming force of Hyder, but seeing his minister subjected to torture, he set fire to his palace, and voluntarily perished in the flames to avoid a similar fate.

and subjected them eventually to the greatest ignominy. The Mahrattas determined to forestal the Nizam, and without waiting for his co operation, crossed the Kistna in January. 1767, and before the end of March had plundered the northern districts to the extent of seventeen lacs of rupees. Hyder discreetly bought them off by a payment of thirty lacs more Madhoo Rao, the Peshwa, on his return from this successful expedition in May, met the Nizam's army at Colar, and was requested to share the plunder with it, but he treated the request with decision, and returned to his capital. leaving him and his English ally to settle with Hyder as they hest could

loins livder

Colonel Smith who commanded the contingent Nivam deserts Nixam deserts to English and of British troops, found, on joining the Nizam's camp, that this perfidious prince, had already entered into negotiations with Hyder, and the Colonel advised the Presidency to be prepared for the invasion of the Carnatic by their ally, as well as by their enemy To remove suspicion the Nizam made the strongest protestations of inviolable good faith, but Colonel Smith, on entering the Mysore territory in May, 1767, perceived such unequivocal tokens of collusion, that he retired with the bulk of his force towards his own frontier, leaving only three battalions and some field pieces with the Nizam, at his special While this negotiation was in progress, the Nizam was intriguing with Nunieral, formerly minister of the old rat of Mysore, for the subversion of Hyder's power Hyder, who had discovered the plot, invited Nunjera; to Seringapatam, after taking a solemn oath on the Koran to do him no harm. an L on his armal, showed him that the oath had been taken on a book of blank leaves, and then stripped him of all his property, and consigned him to perpetual imprisonment. The barguin being now completed, the Nizam engaged to join in an attack on the English, on receiving an immediate payment of twenty lacs of rupees, and a promise of six lacs of inbute But this scene of treachers was relieved by one act of cene-

and 100 guns, while Colonel Smith was only able to muster 1,030 sabres, and 5,800 bayonets, with 16 guns The first encounter with the English troops Patt n of Changan a and took place on the 25th of August, when a small Sept., 1767 detachment was surprised and discomfited. The honour of the British flag was, however, retrieved at Changama, where Colonel Smith totally routed the allied force, but as the Madras Council had entrusted the charge of the commissarrat to their Nabob, Mahomed Ali, and he had, as usuil, disappointed them, Colonel Smith found his army strutened for provisions, and was obliged to fall back on Trinomalce, where, after various manœuvres, he was able to offer battle to the allies The engagement lasted two days, and ended in their total defeat, with flie loss of 4,000 men and 64

830 OPPRATIONS ON THE WESTERN COAST

duct from the commencement of your negotiations for the sircars, without the strongest disapprobation, and when we see the opulent fortunes acquired by our servants since thatperiod, it gives but too much weight to the public opinion, that this rage for negotiations, treaties, and alliances has private advantage for its object, more than the public good " Hyder's presence was required on the western Hyder on the ceast, to male head against a formidable expedition fitted out from Bombay against his ports and his naval power Mangalore and Onore were captured, and the Mysore fleet destroyed, but in the month of May Hyder descended the gliauts with an imposing force, and completely turned the scale The British commander at Mangalore, after a wretched defence, re embarked his troops, 1,500 in number, abandoning, not only all his stores, but 260 of his wounded soldiers, among whom were 80 Europeans Hyder, after wreaking his vengerace on the districts which had manifested a spirit of rebellion during the brief ascendancy of the English power on the coast, returned, after the lapse of seven months, to prosecute the war in the eastern districts But the great opportunity which his long absence afforded to the British army in the Carnatic had been completely sacrificed by the imbeculty of the Madras authorities As if the ling dom of Mysore were already in their possession, they had given it away to their Nabob, Mahomed Ali, and he accom panied the army to take charge of the districts as they were occurred. The provision of the commissariat, on which the movements of the army entirely depended, was, by a fatal error, committed to him, and Colonel Smith, the commandant was controlled and hampered by the deputation of two members of Council to regulate its movements. In soite, however, of these embarrassments, his exertions were attended with such success, that nearly one half the dominions of Hyder, together with eight of his principal forts, and the most important mountain passes fell into his hands Hyder, after a colm consideration of the progress and prospects of the campaign, deemed it the part of prudence in the month of September, to make overtures to Colonel Smith offering to cede the Saramahal to the Company, and to pay down ten lacs of rupces. But the President and Council, inflated with recent success, made the most extravagant demands and Hyder book off the negotiation, and prepared for a mortal conflict

Генар.

The title true.

The title true.

The title of success now turned against the sametre Ear English Colonel Smith yas constrained by the title is skilful manouvres of Hyder to raise the segu of Bangalors, and it was with great difficulty that he was able to maintain his ground The ' field deputies" and the \abob had remained at Colar, where a body of troops, equal to a division, was idly detained for their protection. They had managed between them to rum the prospects of the campaign, the deputies, by their mischievous interference, the Nabob by his neglect in regard to the supply of groves ons On the ap pearance of a detachment sont by Hyder to terrify them, they hastened back to Madias, accompanied by Colonel Smith, who had been invited to return to the Presidency to make room for a more favourite commander Colonel Wood. Thus ended all the bright visions of conquest in which the Madras Council had been indulging during the year and they were now obl med to him t their efforts to the defence of the Company's territories On the 6th of December Hyder descended into the Baramahal and in the course of s.x weeks recovered all the d. tricts which he had lost. It was now the turn of the Council to sol cit an accommodation with him but the terms ther proposed d.d not suit him and, after two months of fruitless negotiations, he resumed his ravages marking his progress by the flames of villages and the flight of the wretched inhabitants Colonel Smith was placed at the head of the troops and, by his rapid and skilful movements, so effectually baffled the plans of Hyder that he determined to attempt, by one hold stroke to bring the war to a termina Brief Arts to ton. Sending all his guns, heavy baggage, and mfantry back to Mysore by the pass of Ahtoor,

CHAP. 332 HYDER DICTATES PEACE AT MADRAS

he placed himself at the head of 6,000 chosen horse, unencumbered by a single gun, and marched a hundred and thirty miles in three days and a half Early on the morning of the-29th of March, his advanced guard appeared at St Thome. five miles from Madras, and a messenger soon after innounced to the bewildered Council that he had come to conduct the negotiations in person. Colonel Smith had been rapidly following in limtrack, and would shortly have reached Hyder therefore demanded that an order should be immediately sent requiring him to half, wherever he might be, on the arrival of the communication, which was despatched by one of his own dromedaries, and the Colonel, to his great chagrin, was obliged to remun mactive during this disgraceful negotiation. Hyder likewise required that Mr. Dunre, who had recently arrived at Madras, to succeed to the office of President, should be sent to his camp to adjust the conditions of peace. On the 4th of April a treaty was concluded on the very moderate terms of a mutual restitution of conquests. But it was at the same time stipulated that "in case either of the contracting puties should be attacked, they should from their respective countries mutually assist each other to drive the enemy out." . Thus ended this ill-managed and unfortunate war by a treaty dictated by Hyder, under the walls of Madras.

demanded a crore of rupees, and the negotiation was broken off In the month of May, 1771, he was constrained by the state of his health, to relinquish the command of the Mahratta army, which devolved on Trimbuck mama Hyder, who dreaded the abilities of the Peshwa, but held the new com mander in contempt, advanced with 30,000 men and forty guns, to the pass of Milgota, where he found himself entrapped into a false position. After spstrining an incessant cannonade for eight days, he was constrained, on the 5th of March, to break up his encompment, and commence his retreat to Sermeanatam, a distance of about twenty-two miles The army commenced its stealthy march by night, but it was revealed to the Mahrattas by accident or treachery, and they instantly made a vigorous assault on the retiring force Hyder, who had been drinling to excess and had not been able to relieve the effects by his usual period of sleep, was in a state of helpless inebricty Tippoo was nowhere to be found, and when he presented himself to his father, the next morning, was overwhelmed with abuse, and beaten without mercy, on which he threw his turban on the ground, and swore by the prophet that he would not draw sword any more that day The rout was complete, and the carnage prodigious, and the army was saved from extermination only by the avidity of the Mahrattas for plunder Hyder, on re covering his senses in the morning, mounted a swift horse, and did not draw rein till he reached his capital Tho Mahrattas laid close siege to it, but as they managed it with more than usual absurdity, Hyder had lessure to collect his scattered forces During these troubles, he repeatedly in scattered forces from the preference of Madras for this succour which the Frighish government was bound, by the recent treaty, to afford him the offered to pay twenty here of rupees for a brigade of troops, and to cede the Branahal, Salem, and Alitoor, and threatened to throw himself into the arms of the French if the assistance was withheld. The President con334 MAURATTA EXPEDITION TO HINDOSTAN Coar the Company to support Hyder. But he was paralysed by the presence and the interference of Sir John Lindsay, whom the ministry of the day had, by an act of incredible folly, sens out as the King's representative to the court of Mahomed Aliand that prince was thus relieved from the salutary control of the Madras government. It was two years before this mischievous mission was recalled, during which time the Nabob was enabled to indulge his extravagant propensities with perfect impunity, to the great delight and benefit of his European creditors He insisted on an alliance with the Mahrattas, which was supported by Sir John Lindsoy, and the Madras Council, not daring to act in opposition to one who was clothed with the royal authority, were construined to abandon Hyder to his fate The desolation of his districts, and the exhaustion of his resources, at length compelled him to sue for peace to the Mahrattas, which was not granted without the immediate payment of thirty six lacs of rupees, besides the size ulation of fourteen lacs of rupees of annual tribute, and the cession of territory, which reduced the kingdom of Mysore to narrower limits than it comprised at the Leginning of the century Nothing exhibits the incapacity of the Madras authorities during the war with Hy der so conspicuously as the contrast between the disgrace which he inflicted on them and the numiliation he sustained from the Mahrattas two years later The breach of faith to which he attr-buted his misfortunes he never forgot or forgave, and it resulted in establishing Mah-

ratta garrisons on the northern frontier of the Carnatic

established, was not of his family, but was thee I at the head of the army by Aylah bye, the process who, for thirty Years, managed the state with consummate ability. The army, consisting of 300 000 horse and foot, and commanded by Vi-ajec, the Peshwas general, burst like a flood on Raj pootana, and levied contributions to the extent of ten lacs of rupees. The Jants, the next victims, were constrained to make a composition for sixty five lass, of which ten were paid down at once During these transactions, the Mahratta chiefs invited the emperor to return to Delhi under their protection. That prince had continued to reside at Allahabad after the arrangement concluded by Clive in 1760, in the tranquil enjoyment of the supend allotted to him The government of Delhi and of the districts still attached to the crown, were administered for seven years with extra-ordinary talent and success, by Aujech ood dowlah, the Rohilla chief, whom Mr Werelst, the governor of Bengal, justly designated "a great and good man," and on his death in October, 1770, by his son Zabita Khan The emperor was naturally desirous of proceeding to Delhi and mounting the throne of his appearors. The Mahrattas were equally des rous of becoming the instrument of seating him on it, and turning the influence of his name to account. The Council in Call cutta, however, strongly disquaded him from this measure. feeling confident that it would involve the affairs of Hin dostan in confusion, and eventually prove detrimental to his own interests But the emperor turned a deaf ear to their remonstrances and threw himself on the protection of the Vahrattas, by whom he was conducted to Delhi and installed on the 2ath of December, 1771

Early in 177? they entered Rohilcund reduced the Dooah, and laid waste the whole province. The fam ly of Zabita Khain was made prisoners, and the great wealth accumulated by him and his father they appropriated to their own use The Rohilla chiefs in the retirently, were dirent to solicit the aid of the Finer, though they were fully aware that the

their country, and make common cause in the expedition The Vizier, in an agony of terror, offered, when the Mahrattas gettred, to restore the bond Hafiz had given him But the Robilla chief needed no such inducement to refrain from an alliance with those whom he regarded as "the savage and infidel Mahrattas," and resolved to co operate with the Vizier in opposing them That helpless prince, at the same time, in-ulored the aid of the Council in Calcutta, who directed a brigade of troops to advance for the protection of the country Several detachments of Mahratta horse laid waste a portion of Robilcund, but the main body was held in check by the combined forces of the Robillas, the Vizier, and Sir Richard Barker Meanwhile, the young Peshwa, having planned an expedition to the south, required the presence of the troops employed in Hindostan, and the Mahratta general suddenly broke up his en campment in the month of May, and retired across the Nerbudda, laden with the booty of three campaigns But, even before the disappearance of the Mahrattas, and while the Rohills chiefs were cordially engaged in supporting the cause of the Vizier, that prince was plotting their expulsion from Robilcund, and the appropriation of their estates. The sequel of these transactions, belongs to the history of Hastings's administration, and we turn therefore to the progress of Indian affairs in England. The British Government in India at this period

The triver was a strange and unprecedented anomaly. The company's agents of a London trading Company had in a gents of a London trading Company had in a propulation twice as numerous as the subjects of their own king. The directors of a counting house in London were making peac, and war, setting up thrones and pulling them down, and disposing of princely iteration. Their servants alread with salaries of only three or four hundred pounds a year, were moreover, coming home, year after year, with colosisal furture, made in four or five years, and exting the

thus become a scene of jobbery and corruption, such as had never, perhaps, been seen in England before, and was scarcely faralleled by the depravity which prevailed among their servants abroad. The great marvel is, how the British power in India survived the crime and confusion which with some bulliant exceptions, characterised the period of fifteen ears, between the battle of Plassy, and the new organisation of 173.

In these creumstances it for was a general diagram of the property of th

Patismentary and for Parliamentary enquiry. It was seventy mand for Parliamentary enquiry. It was seventy years since the House of Commons had interfered in the affairs of the Company, it was then only a commercial interest; it was now a political power. The first movement of the Minister was to claim for the Crown the sovereignty of the territories acquired by its subjects in India. The Company resisted the demand, and maintained that the possessions which had been obtuined by their arms belonged exclasively to them. This dispute was for a time comprosised by conceding the territorial revenues to them for five years, on the payment of forty lacs a year to the nation. It was I kewise proposed to remedy the disorders in India by sending out three of the most eminent of the retired servants of the Company with unlimited powers, but the vessel in which they end ark if foundered at see.

Peace and a Meanwhile, the financial difficulties of the Comlearning at party brought on a crisis. All the golden dreams which the acquisition of the three soolabs had created, were rudely dispated. Fraudulent bills in India for contracts, cantonment and fortifications, and extravagant charges for travelling, thet, and parade, had extravagant charges for travelling, the same and extravagant charges for travelling, and of more than a million in calcutt. The Court of Propuetors as if they were anxious to compete with the prof gavy of their screams in India, chose flus period of impening bankruptcy, to vote themselves a dardand of twelve and a half per cent. The Court of ГСНАР.

Directors borrowed repeatedly of the Bank of England, until the Bank would lend no more They then applied to the minister, Lord North, for a loan of a million from the public, to prevent closing the doors of the India House, and he coolly referred them to Parliament, which was convened earlier than usual, to take their affairs into consideration A Select Committee was appointed in 1772 to collect evidence, when the whole system of violence and iniquity, by which the British name had been tarnished in India, and individuals enriched, was laid bare to the nation Parliament determined at once to take the regulation of Indian affairs into its own hands The Directors protested against this violation of their chartered rights, as they termed the intervention of Parliament, but they had incurred universal odum and contempt. and the Minister was enabled to carry his measures with a lugh hand. The immediate necessities of the Company were relieved by the loan of a million sterling from the exchequer The vicious constitution of the India House was corrected. the qualification for a single vote was raised from £500 to £1,000, and twelve hundred proprietors were thus disfran chised at one stroke, no individual was to enjoy more than four votes, whatever amount of stock he might hold, and six Directors only were to go out annually, which extended the tenure of office to four years The Governor of Bengal was appointed Governor General, on a salary of £25,000 a year. with four counsellors at £10,000, and they were in the first instance nominated by Parliament At the same time a Crown Court was established in Calcutta, to administer English law on the model of the Courts in Westminster, with a Chief Justice at £8 000, and three Puisne Judges, at £6,000 a year The Act which embodied these provisions is known as the Regulating Act. Its enactments regarding the home government were highly judicious and beneficial, but those which referred to the government in India concocted without knowledge or experience, only seemed to increase the complication of affairs, and shook the power of Britain in the East to its foundation.

340 c

CHAPTER VIII

HASTINGS'S ADMINISTRATION AND THE MAHRATTA WAR. 1772—1782

WARREN HASTINGS was appointed the first Governor General under the new Act,—a man endowed by nature with the great est talent for government, and whose renown has not been eclipsed by the most illustrious of his successors. He landed in Calcutta in January, 1750, at the age of eighteen, and was employed for six years in the duties of appraising silk and muslins, and copying invoices The political exigencies which arose out of the battle of Plassy suddenly developed his administrative abilities, which Clive was the first to discover and foster He was selected to represent the Company at the Moorshedabid durbir, which at the time, was one of the most arduous and delicate posts in the service. Three years after, he came by rotation to the Council board in Cal cutta, and strenuously supported Mr Vansittart in his opposition to those profligate measures which issued in the war with Meer Cassim In the most venal period of the Bengal administration he was distinctuished by high principle and unsullied probity, and returned to England on furlough in eraceful poverty, while his colleagues were retiring from the service with ambitious fortunes By this step he forfeited his position in the service, according to the rules then in force, and he long solicited to be restored to it, but without success By a happy accident, however, he was at length required to cave evidence before a committee of the House of Commons when the clearness of his statements, and the breadth of his views, excited the admiration both of the Court of Directors and the Ministry, and he was at once appointed second in Council at Madras

State of Pen-al. The double government established by Chre 312 .

garded at first as a master piece of policy, soon proved to be the curse of Bengal It combined all the vices of a native government with all the confusion and mischief inseparable from foreign interference The management of the revenue, which included the entire administration, was in the hands of native agents, who were subject to the supervision of the British resident at Moorshedabad, but his control was merely nominal There was no European functionary in Bengal conversant with revenue details, and the zemindars were at liberty to make their own terms with the rvots on the one hand, and with the treasury on the other, in every case it was the interests of the state which suffered. Individuals grew rich, while the government was sinking in debt check these abuses, supervisors or collectors were appointed in 1769 to look after the revenue, but they were both ignorant and rapacious, and became mere tools in the liands of their banians, or native factors The public money they collected was employed, for the most part, in supporting the monopolics which they and their native banians had established in the traffic of the district, and the value of their appointments consequently ranged from one to three lacs of rupees a year The Court of Directors determined, therefore, "to stand forth as Duan, and to take on themselves the entire care and management of the revenues through the agency of their own servants" This decision involved a complete revolution in the whole system of administration, civil, criminal, and fiscal, among twenty five millions of people, and a more momentous change than any which had taken place since the days of Albar and Toder Mull Hastings was considered the only man in the Company's service capable of manufurating this new policy, and he was accordingly clevated to the chair in Bengal, and took charge of the government on the 13th April, 1772

Warren Martings President zeal and energy It was resolved to farm out the Gazachurez lands for five years, and the President and four members of the Council proceeded through the districts to conduct the settlements The offers made by the zemmdars were, however, deemed unsatisfactory, and it was determined to put the lands up to competition, after abolishing some of the most oppressive of the imposts with which the land had latterly been saddled Where the old zemindars were displaced by higher bidders, an allowance was granted for their support out of the rents The Khalsa, or exchequer, was removed from Moorshedabad to Calcutta, to which the entire administration of the country, in every branch, was transferred, and which became, from this date, the capital of Bengal. The charge of civil and criminal justice in each district was entrusted to European officers, and two courts of appeal were established at the seat of government. Without the aid of an English lawyer. Hastings drew up a short and simple code of regulations for the new courts, which exhibited in a remarkable degree the versatility of his talents All these organic changes in the system of government were completed in six months. The Mahrattas had no sooner crossed the

The factor. The Maintattas had no sooner crossed the beam it. Ganges on their return home, than the Vizier began to importune Hastings to assist him in seizing the province of Robileund, and offered a donation of forty lices of rupees, and the payment of two lacs a month for the services of the English force. The Court of Directors, overwhelmed with debt and dagrace, were imploring the Council in Calcutta for remutances, and urging a reduction of the multi-ry expenditure, which was devouring the resources of the country. The treasury in Calcutta was empty, but the offer of the Vizier seemed to be exactly adapted to meet the offer of the Vizier seemed to be exactly adapted to meet the offer of the Vizier seemed to be exactly adapted to meet the offer of the Vizier seemed to be and if that the Robillas had offered to pay the vizier the sum of forty lacs of rupees if he would deliver them from the Mahartast; that they had been saved from destruction by the presence of the Vizier's troops and those of his English ally, and, that now the danger was passed, they fraued to pay anything. With this gathfed statement of the case, Hastings satisfied his conscience, and concluded that their ingratitude deserved punishment, and that, on the plan suggested by the Vizier, an act of just retribution might be made the means of replenishing the Company's coffers The Vizier wanted territory, and Hastings wanted money "Such," he wrote, "was my idea of the Company's distress in Figland and India, that I should have been glad of any occusion of employing these forces, which saves so much of their may and expenses" Hastings accordingly proceeded to Bennes in August, 1773, and con-

844

sluded a treaty with the Vizier on the terms proposed by him The districts of Corali and Allahabad were considered to have lapsed to the Company, when the emperor, to whom Clive had given them, was compelled to male them over to the Mahrattas The defence of these districts-such was the extravagance and embezzlement in the military department-had cost the treasury two crores of runces in five years, and Hastings wisely determined to "free the Company from this intolerable burden, and transferred them to the Vizier who offered an additional payment of fifty lacs of rupees for them The subsidy of twenty six lacs of rupces a year from the revenues of the three soobahs, which had leen settled on the emperor, was suspended during the great famine which depopulated and pauperised Bengal, and, as he had now ceased to be a free agent, it was finally hadedade

The Vizier having secured the aid of an English Destruction of force demanded of Hafiz Ruhmut the payment of, the Robil as 23rd April. the balance of his bond, thirty five lacs of rupces 1774

Hafiz offered to male good whatever sum the Vizier had actually paid the Mahrattas for their forbearance. but as he knew that he had never paid them anything the offer was treated with contempt. Haliz, seeing the storm ready to burst upon his head, proposed a compromise, but the Vizier raised his demand to two hundred lacs of rupees. and the Pohillas adopted the resolution of defending their independence to the last extremity Colonel Champion the British commander, advanced into Robilcund, accompanied by the Vizer's army, and the campaign was decedd in a single fengingment, on the 23rd of April, 1774 Haffa brought 40,000 Rol illas into action, and exhibited a degree of military skill and courage, which excited the admiration of his Euro pean opponents. But nothing could withstand the steady churge of British bryonets, and after two hours of severe conflict, and the slaughter of more schan 2 000 Rohillas—among whom was the brive Haffa and his son—they were obliged to fly The dastardly Vizier remained with his troops beyond the reach of firt, till the Polillas were defeated, when he let them loose to plunder the camp "We have the honour of the day" exclaimed the indignant Champion, "and these banditt the profit."

This transaction is one of the few stains on the this transaction, bright and honourable career of Hastings It has been urged in extenuation, of it that the Robillas were mere usurpers, with no right to the province but that of the sword But so were nine tenths of the princes of India at the time The usurpation of Holkar, and Sindia, and Hyder Ali and even of the I cshwa, and the Nizam, was quite as modern as that or the Robillas, and the Nabob vizier himself was only the grandson of the Khorasan merchant, who had abenated Oude from the crown of Dellu That the Robillas formed a powerful confederacy on the borders of Oude, which in the unsettled state of India, might have joined the Mahrattas and endangered the safety of a province which the Company was bound, no less by policy than by treaty to defend cannot be controverted. The extinction of this dangerous power was a wise and politic measure so far as anything that is intrinsically unjust can be wise and politic. Such transactions were, moreover, of constant occurrence in India no nitive prince saw anything unusual or unjust in it, and even the hol illas themselves considered it only as one of the chances of war to which they, in common with all states, were constantly hable. But it was inconsistent with that higher stan land of morals by which Hastings a conduct was indeed in England, and it has been invariably condemned, even by those who admire his genius. The conduct of the Vizier towards the conquered, in spite of Hastings's rementriances and threats, was infamous, but the assertion that 500,000 hisbandmen were driven across the Ganges, and that the country was reduced to a bare and uninhabitable waste, was an Onental exaggeration. The "extermination," which was so loudly denounced by the enemies of Hastings, had reference only to the power of the Afghans, who did not exceed 20,000 in number. The Hindeo natives of the soil, numbering more than a million, experenced no other distress than that which follows every change of masters in India.

ARRIVAL OF THE COUNSELLORS AND JUDGES [CHAP,

Hastings had succeeded in reorganising the Arrival of the administration, and extinguishing the Indian debt men are of He had overcome all the difficulties which beset his position on his arrival, but he was now called to encounter the more serious dangers which grose out of the provision made by the wisdom of Parliament for the better covernment of India. The judges of the Supreme Court and the new members of Council arrived from England, and landed at Chandral shaut on the 19th of October, 1774, with the firm conviction that the government was a compound of tyranny and corruntion, which it was their mission to purify As the underes stepped on shore, one of them, observing the bare legs and feet of the natives who crowded to the sight, said to his colleague. "Our court, brother, certainly was not established before it was needed. I trust we shall not have been six months in the country before these victims of oppression are comfortably provided with shoes and stockings" Of the counsellors. Colonel Monson had served on the coast, General Clavering was the favourite of the King and the Ministry, and Mr Francis, the undoubted author of Junius's letters, had been an assistant in the War Office, and was distinguished for his talents and his malignity. They had all imbibed the most violent prejudices against Mr Hastings, and regarded him as a monster of iniquity, whom it was the part of virtue

Гспір. leagues that all the engagements between the two states were cancelled by this event, except those which referred to the payment of arrears, and that whatever assistance he might the zemindary of Benarcs, which yielded twenty-two lacs of seccive from British troops must be based on a new arrangement A treaty was accordingly concluded under the auspices of Mr Francis, and although he had condemned Hastings in no measured terms "for letting out British troops for hire to the Vizier," the services of the brigade were continued to him, but the amount of the hire was augmented by half a lac of rupees a month The Vizier was likewise peremptorily commanded to code to the Company, rupees a year, and this was the only addition made to the British territory during the long period of Hastings's administration

350

peatedly denounced by the Court of Directors for his perfidy, and whose career had been marked by the most nefamous intrigues and treachery, offered to impeach Hastings, and was immediately taken into the alliance of the three counsellors Under their auspices, he held his durbar in state in Calcutta, and issued his mandates to the zemindars throughout the country. At length, he came forward with a charge against Hostings of having received a bribe of three lass and a half of rupees on the appointment of Munee Begum, the widow of Meer Jaffier, and his own son, Raja Gooroodass, to the management of the Nabob's household at Moorshedabad, and blowise of having connived at the embezzlements of Mahomed Reza khan for a douceur of ten lacs Mr Francis and his colleagues proposed that Nundu koomar should be called before the Council board to substantiate the charge Hastings, as might have been expected, opposed this proceeding with creat indignation "I know," he said, "what belongs to the dignity and character of the first member of this administration, and I will not sit at this board in the character of a criminal" does not appear that on this or any other occasion, Hastings endeavoured to stille enquiry, or objected to his opponents forming a committee of investigation, and reporting their proceedings to their masters at home, or referring the questions at issue to the arbitriment of the Supreme Court, but he felt that the government would be degraded in the eyes of the native community, if the dregs of society were introduced into the Council chamber to criminate the President at the instigation of Nunda koomer, and he dissolved the meeting and left the chamber The majority immediately placed General Clavering in the chair, and called in Nundu boomar who dilated on the venality of Hastings, and morcover, produced a letter purporting to be written by Munee bernm herself, which admitted the payment of two lacs and a half of rupees to the Governor General, on which Mr Francis and his friends resolved with one consent, that Hastings had clandestinely and illegally received three lacs and forty thousand rupces, and that measures should be taken to compel him to repay it into the public treasury. The signature to the letter was pronounced on the most impartial examination to be spurnous, but the seal appeared to be genume. The begun herself demed all knowledge of the letter, and the mystery of the seal was not decovered till after the death of Nundu koonar, when fac similes of the scals of all the most eminent personages in Bengal were found in his cabnet

Hastings, in self-defence, now brought an ac-Precedition of Numbu koomer tion in the Supreme Court against Numbu koomer tion in the Supreme Court against Numbu 17's. koomer and others for a consuracy to induce one Kumal ood deen, a large revenue farmer, to criminate him The judges admitted the charge and held Nundu koomer to bail, and Mr Francis and his two associates immediately paid him a complimentary visit at his own res lence Light weeks after the commencement of this action, one Mohun Prisad, a native merchant renewed an action for forgery against Nundu koomer, which had been originally instituted in the local court, when Nundu koomer was arrested but released, through the intervention of Was at research, through the Suprement of the Suprement o him to be hung. It was the first instance of the execution of a brahmin, since the English became lords of the country. and it created a profound sensation in the native community Thousands of Hindoos surrounded the scallold, unwilling to believe it eir own eyes, and when the deed was completed, rushed down to the sacred stream to wash out the pollution. This transaction was long considered the most

This transaction was long considered the most this transaction atrocious crime of Hastings & administration. It was asserted in high quarters that Nundu koomer was asserted in high quarters that Nundu koomar had been judicially murdered by him through the agency of Sir Elijah Impey, the chief justice But time has dispelled

HASTINGS CONDEMNED AT HOME ٠.

no other ground than the coincidence of this trial, in point of time with the accusations brought by Nundu koomar against Hastings' There never was the slightest evidence that Hastings had ever prompted, or even encouraged the action. The capital sentence, however conformable to the barbarous laws of England at the time, was, on every consideration, most unjust. The affence was venial by the laws of the country, and the English code, which made it capital, was not introduced till several years after it had been committed Mr Francis and his colleagues protested against the whole proceeding, but the judges indignantly refused to submit to any dictation in the exercise of their indicial functions But after the sentence had been passed, it was still within the power of the majority of the Council who exercised the whole authority of the government, to suspend the execution of it. pending a reference to England, they did not, however, choose to interfere, and the odium of this transaction must be divided between them and the judges Nundu koomar, who began life a poor man, left a fortune of a crore of rupees Towards the close of 1775, the decision of the The Court of Court of Directors on the matters in dispute between Mr Francis and Hastings, was received in They condemued the measures of the Governor-General in strong language, but they neither ordered the restitution of Robilcund to the Robillas, nor the return of the forty lacs which had enriched their treasury, to the Vizier. But they recommended concord and unanimity to the Council, and the alvice was received with a shout of derision by both parties The adverse resolutions of the Directors were, however, overruled by the Proprietors, who held Hastings in the highest estimation, and the dissensions abroad, aggravated by the discord at home, brought the British interests in India to the verge of destruction, from which they were rescued only by the firmness and resolution of the Governor General. In September, 1776, his authority in the government was reI max stored by the death of Colonel Monson, which gave him the casting vote in an equally balanced Council But in the preceding year, worned by the opposition and insults of his opponents, he lad inf rmed his agent in England, Colonel Macleane, that it was his i itention to resign his appointment. if he found that his measures were not approved of at home But within two months of this communication, he recovered his spirits, revoked his resignation and at the same time informed the Mimster, Lord North, that he would remain at ha nost till he was recalled by the same authority -that of Parliament.—which had placed him at the head of the govern But Colonel Macleane, fin ling the current against Hastings as strong in Leadenhall Street as it was in Down ing Street, took upon limself to announce to the Court of Directors that he was authorised on certain conditions, to tender his patron's resignation. After several months of violent intrigue which it is not nece sary to detail the Di rectors came to the resolut on that Mr Hastings had positively resigned his office though his latest as well as his carliest letters were before them, and appointed Mr. Wheler to the recent seat in Council When intell cence of this resolution reacted

Calcutacy Calcutta, General Clavering whom Lord North has said as. had encouraged in his opposition to Hastings by III the Order of the Buth attempted to senze the government, as being the senior member of Council, obtained possession of the Council Chamber and took the oaths as Governor General. He likewise demunded the keys of the Treasury and of the fort from Hastings, and wrote to the commandant to obey no orders but those which emanated from him Hastings, who dad not admit the fact of his resignate of the Calcutter of the gates of Fort William and his messengers found them closed against him. The dispute was rap lly tending to a collision, which must have proved in the highest degree disastrous to the nutrests of the Company, when Hastings reported in averted it by referring the question to the Judges of the Supreme Court After a careful investigation of all the documents connected with this transaction, they came to the decision, that any assumption of authority by Sir John Clavenne would be illegal, and the storm like over He did not survive the chagrin of this disappointment many months Mr Wheler, who had taken his seat in Council, though professing neutrality, generally siled with I rancis, but the casting vote of the Governor General overruled all of position. At the beginning of 1780, Mr Barwell was anxious to return to his native land with the colossal fortune he had accumulated. but he hesitated to embark and leave his friend Hastings in a minority Mr Francis, unwilling to stand in the way of Mr Birnell's retirement came to an understanding with Hastings not to take advantage of it, and Mr Barwell embarked for Fugiand. But the discord was speedily renewed, the antagonists could not agree on the nature or extent of the neutrality Hastings charged I raifes with having duped him. and the distute was settled, according to the barbarous custom of the times, by a hostile meeting, in which Mr Francis was wounded At the close of the year he returned to England The acttlement of the land revenue, which had New settlement of the land been made for five years, expired in 1777, when it wereaus, 177 was found that the country had been graevoisly rack-rented. Many of the zenundars, and hous of retaining their position in the country, had made offers which they soon found themselves unalle to support. The speculators, who had in many cases outlad and dislodged the old landholders, had no object but to enrich themselves by oppressive exactions, and throw up their engagements as soon as the ryots were exhausted. The government, new to their duties, had committed serious errors. To the usual imperfection of all new materials, was in the sineance added an entire ignorance of the quality and value of the lands and even of the language of those who held them. The whole system collapsed, the precoverable balances, the Company lost little short of two crores and a half of rupces in five years Before the expiration of the old settlement. Hastings had wisely appointed a commission of inquiry to travel through the country and collect data for a new arrangement. The Court of Directors denounced the commission as a flagrant job, and charged Hastings with "the meanest and most corrupt motives in the selection of the members" They expressed their surprise that any such inquiry should be found necessary, after they had held the Dewanny for ten years But they seemed to forget that their own time had been occupied in cabal and intrigue at home, to the neglect of the duties of administration, and that their ill paid revenue officers in India had been too closely occupied in making fortunes by private trade to have any lessure to attend to the interests of the state By order of the Directors, the settlement was therefore made for one year only

Death of Mahoat and Naryun Ease Maybo and Young Peshwa, Madhoo Rao, little inferior to any Naryun Ease Tenbesa of his race in the cabinet or in the field, died of consumption, on the 18th of November, 1772.

At the period of his death, the nominal revenue of the Mahritte empre in Hindostan and in the Decean, was ten crores of rupces, but the amount actually realized did not greatly exceed seven erores, of which the sum at the absolute disposal of the Peshaw are only three corres, the remainder of it belorged to the Guickwar, Blionelay, Hollar, Sindia, and minor chieffuns. The Peshawas own army consisted of 50 000 horse, besides infantry and artillery, but the entire army he was able to assemble under the national standard was not less than 100,000 splendid evalry, and a proportionate strength of foot and artillery, not including the Prudarrees, or hereditary freebooters of the country. It was a fortunite erreumstance for India that this formidable force, maintied by the instinct of Ilunder, and stimulated by the maculations of maculations old and astute statesman, Nana Furnuvese, and the military commandant, and at once assumed all the functions of government. Raglobn, on the news of thus revolution, hastened to meet his opponents, accompanied by Moran Rao, one of the greatist solders of the age, who had measured swords with Lawrence and Coote in the Carnata, and on the 4th of March inflicted a signal defeat on the army of the Regency. This success replemished his military chest, and brought crowds to his standard, fortune seemed to declare in his favour, when, having conceived suspicious of the fidelity of his own generals, he threw away his chance of power by turning off to Boorhaippore, instead of marching at once on Poona, which its terrified inhabitants had begun to desert. The widow was delivered of a son on the 18th of April, 1774, who was instilled as Peshwa when only ten days old, under the tutle of Middioo Rao the Second

xnt 1

After remaining a short time at Boothanpore, Barbala III. Regiona crossed the Nerbudda to Indore, where he was joined by Holkar and Sinda, who had returned from Rohileand with about 30,000 horse. He also indulged the hope of recaving and from the raja of Berar, and advanced to the briks of the Taptee, to scene the co operation of the Guickart arm? In reference to the province of Guzerat, then under the rule of this family, it is to be observed that the authority of the Emperor was finally extinguisted in it during the year 1750, when the capital, Alimedabud, was captured by Damajee Guickwer, the Mahritta sudar. At the prind of his death, in 1768, his son, Govind Rao, who hapfund to be at Poona, of tuned his father is title and posses is as on the payment of various sums, which eventually rached fifty laces of rupees. In 1771, his brother, futth Sing, proceeded to the Pestwa's court, and succeeded in Suj1buting him, but Govind kvo's cut was esponied by Ba<sub>b</sub>bobs, on Lecoming Peshwa, and the province was districted by these in it claims. Lighobs now advanced to claim the supper of the prof see.

Ragnoha s negotiations with tile English, 1774

During the year 1772, the Court of Directors a resolved to place a representative at the Poon-durbur, in the hope of promoting their commercial interests, and, more especially, of obtaining pos session of the port of Bassem, and the island of Salsette, which was separated from Bombay by a narrow channel, and comprised an area of about 150 square miles With these acquisitions the Directors hoped to render Bombay the great emporium of the trade of the western coast with Persia, Arabia the Red Sea, and China These possessions fell into the hands of the Portuguese in an early period of their career, but were conquered by the Mahrattas in 1730, by whom they were prized beyond their value, as having been wrested from a European power Raghoba, on his arrival at the Taptos sent an envoy to Bombay to solicit the aid of a sufficient force to establish him in the government at Poona, and offered to defray all the expenses of the troops, as well as to make luge grants of territory to the Company The President and Council eagerly grasped at the proposal, and on the 6th of September, 1774, offered to assist him with 2,500 troops on condition of his advancing fifteen or twenty lacs of rupces, and engaging to cede Salsette and Bassein in perpetuity to the Company But Raghoba, even in his ext. emity, refused to alienate Salsette from the Mal ratta dominions these negotiations were pending, the Bombay authorities received information that a large aimment was fitted out at Goa for the recovery of these possessions, and as it was felt that the Portuguese would be more dangerous neighbours than the Malnattas, an expedition was sent to balsette, and the isl u d occupied before the end of the year heapshara Menwhile, the Regency at Poona having succeeds by large, officis in detaching Hollar and being such as hida from it occurs of Ragholya, moved against him with a body of 30 000 men and he narrowly escaped being captured by his perfid ous allies and delivered up to his encurse. He retreated in all histo, leaving his beam at other, for the first time since the gentlemen of the factory at Surat had so gallantly repulsed Sevagee in 1669 brunt of the action fell on Colonel Keating's brigade, which was attacked by an army of ten times ats number. The loss of life was severe but, though the English troops were for a time staggered, their fi al triumph was complete, and the Mahrattas retreated in baste and disorder to the Nerbudda Colonel Keating purshed them with vigour, and they considered themselves fortunate in effecting their escape across the river, after they had thrown all their heavy guis into it Futteh Sing now hastened to make his neace with the victors. and engaged to furmsh Raghoba with twenty six lacs of runees in two months, together with a large body of troops. and to secure to the Company a share of the Broach revenues to the extent of two lacs a year The Mahratta navy, more over, which consisted of six vessels, carrying from 26 to 46 guns, was completely empled by the English commodoic The campaign had been prosperous by sea and land, the Company had obtained a territorial revenue of twenty-four lacs a year, the Mahrattas had been driven with dismace across the Nerbudda, and so effectually damaged was their reputation, that the Nizam was emboldened to take advantage of their distress, and, under the threat of joining Raghoba, exacted a c ssion of lands valued at eleven lace a year. But the brilliant prospects which this success opened up were runed by the proceedings of the Calcutta tumpyuate

T caty with Raghoba d sallow d at Calcutta, 1775

The treaty with Raghoba, which appeared hely at to involve a war with the Ragency, was severely condemned by both part as in the Council in Call cutta, as "impolitic, dangerous, unguith (rised, and unjust." When the war, however, had actually communeed, Hastings considered, it almost impossible to withdraw from it with honor and safety, before the conclusion, and he advised that the Bombry Government should be vigorously supported in con lineting it, and instructed to bring it to a termination as specially as possible. But Mr Francis and his collagents intention to send an agent of their own to open an independent negotiation with the ministers at Poons. In vain did the Bombay Council remonstrate with them on the disgrace of violating a solumn treaty Colwel Upton was sent to Poons to disavow their proceedings; their authority was paralysed, and their character wantonly disgraced in the eyes of the princes of India.

861

to the lanks of the Godwery on a penson of three lacs of rupees a year The British army was to quit the field. Salsette was to be retained by the Company if the Governof-General desire 1 it, but all the other acquisitions were to be relinquished, the claim on the revenues of Broach was conceded, together with twelve lies of rupees, towards the expenses of the war, "by way of favour" Considering that all the advantages of the campaign had been on the side of the Inglish, the Bombay Presidency was fully justified in repro Inglish, the formuly Presidency was conjugation in expo-biting the treaty, as "highly injurious to the reputation and the interests of the Gompany." It was a flagrant breach of faith with Ragoba, and it served to impur the confidence of the native powers in the engagements of the British Government. It inspired the Poons Regency with an undue sense of their own importance, and rendered a second warries itable. The Bombay Council did not conceal their anxiety to obstruct the treaty They gave an asylum to Raglioba at Surat, and threw their field armies into Surat and Broach The Poona ministers raved at this infraction of the treaty, and threatened to carry fire and sword into every part of the Company s dominions, but all their menaces were treated with contempt at Bombay On the 20th of August, 1776, a despatch was Decision necessary of the Souris of Directors's approving of the treaty concluded with Raghoba at Surat, and directing the other Presidencies to give him their support, and to retun the territories which had been ceded by him The Bombay Council, smarting under the degradation inflicted on them by the Supreme Government, lost no time in turning this favourable decision to account. To the great annoyance of the Poona Regency, they gave countenance to an impostor, who claimed the office of Pest wa, as the identical Sudaseeb Rao Bhao, who had disappeared at the battle of Pamput They invited Raghoka to Bombay, and settled 10,000 rupees a month on him. The Mahratta erbinet remonstrated against this fresh violation of the treaty of Poorunder, but it was weakened by internal discords. Sufficient Baypook, the head of the ministry, was realous of the growing power of his younger associate, Nana Furnivese, who had fled from the field of Pamput, and who united the highest political talent with a singular want of personal courage His cousin, Maroba Furnivese, had been the minister of the deceased Madhoo Rao. and took a prominent part in public affairs, but in the interests Malid use Sindia was endeavouring to mercaso his own consequence by acting as umpire between the two factions. To increase the confusion at Poona, a French adventurer, of the name of St. Lubin, arrived there in March, 1777, and announced himself as the envoy of the King of France, who was on the eve of a war with the English He was authorised, as he said, to offer the Mahrattas the support of 2,500 European troops, an abundant supply of stores and munitions of war, and officers to discipline 10,000 sepoys He affected horror at the connection of the English with the assassin Righola, and produced in the durbir, with a burst of grief, a picture of the barbarous murder of Naravun Rao, which had been painted under his direction at Paris Nana Furnavese affected to credit his mission, and, with the view of annoving the English government, afforded him every encouragement, and made over to him the harbour of Choul, ally twenty-three miles from Bombay Meanwhile, a despatch was received at Bombay and Calcutta from the Court of Directors,

प्रया [

Ragicoba, 17'8. regretting the sacrifices made by the treaty of Poorunder, and statuer that, although they considered themselves bound in honour to adhere to it, yet, if there was any eattempt on the part of the Poon's Regency to evade its provisions, the Bomlay Pre idency was at liberty to renew the alliance with Paghoba The President and Council found little difficulty in discovering infractions of a treaty which those who had dictated it never intended to respect but as it suited their interests and prepared to espouse the cause of Raghol a Their movements were hastened by the course of events at the Mahratta capital, Moraba Furnuvese, assisted by Holkar, resolved to support Raghoba, and Succaram Bappoo goined the confederacy, and despatched an envoy to Bombay to request the government to conduct Raghoba to Poons with a military escort. The proposal was eagerly accepted, and preparations were immediately made for the expedition Hastings, who had now regained his ascendancy in the Council, gave the project his approbation, partly because it was countengueed by Succaram Bippoo, one of the parties to the treaty of Poorunder, but chiefly because Nana Furnivese was giving encouragement to the French, whose influence in Indian politics he considered the greatest of columntees. In a letter dated the 23rd of March, 1778, he authorized the Bombay Government "to assist in tranquilhong the Mahratta state," and engaged to send a large force series the continent to resist the aggressions of the French, which, in his opinion, threatened the existence of the Company's possessions in the west of India

864

Nana Furnivese was obliged to bend to the Co inter revolu storm, and retire to Poorunder Hurry Punt, the tion at looms, 8 h July 1,78 Maliratta general in chief, and one of his partizans, was, at the time, on his way to Merich, to join Sindia in resisting the encroachments of Hyder, to which reference will be made hereafter. They were hastly recalled from the south, and reached Poorunder on the 8th of July, where they united with the army of Holkar, who had been, in the meantime, detached from the opposite party by a bribe of nine lace of rupees, and restored Nana Furnivese again to nower Maroba and his colleagues were arrested on the 11th and many of them put to death, but Succaram Bappoo, whose name it was deemed important to associate with the pro ceedings of the state, was simply placed under restraint The party of Raghoba was thus extinguished at Poons But the Bombay President and Council were not disposed to desert him They addressed certain questions to the new munistry at Poona, the replies were considered a violation of the treaty of Poolunder, and it was resolved to put to use the liberty granted to them in the despatch of the Conrt of Directors and in the letter of Hastings. Towards the end of August, he informed them that he was end, arouning to form an alliance with the Rajah of Berur, which would embrace the politics of Poona, and enjoined them to avoid any recasure hostile to the Poona Pegency. But their passions were enlisted in the cause of Rajahoba, which, in effect, they made their own, and without adequate particularly without a communder on whom they could dipend, and without alliances, they determined to send a handful of men aguinst the strength of the Mahratta empire. Nan Furnavese perceived the gathering storm, and prepared to meet it, he enlisted recruits in every direction, repaired and provisioned his forts and refitted his yes els.

A new treaty was now made with Raghoba, Faper tion to which differed little from that of Surat NOT 11 8. army of 4 000 men, of whom 600 were Europeans. Was equipped and entrusted to Colonel Egerton who had seen some service in Europe, but was little qualified for the seen some service in Europe, but was note quantity for duty assigned him. Derigarding the exprinence so dearly bought in the way with Hivder in 1768, * field deputies," in her the name of civil commi. * oners, were sent with the army to control its novements, and to cheek peculation. Carrico, who had won some credit in the field in Bengal was appointed the senior commissioner, and he exhibited his fitness for such a trust by a squabble on the first day, with Colonel Tourton about the military honours to be paid him. The troop, encumbered with 10 000 bullocks be ides other cattle, embarked at Panwell on the 25th of November, and, as if it embarked at Fanweu on the 25th of Vovember, and, as it it I ad been designed to afford Vana and Sinda the most ample let ure for preparation moved at the rate of two miles a day It was the 25rd of December before the army ascended the ghauts, when its deasters began by the loss of one of the mot energetic, bold and judicious officers in its ranks, Captain Stewart whose name after the lapse of half a cultury, was still held in veneration by the inhabitants of those valleys as Stewart Phakray, or Stewart the gal lant On the 6th of January, Colonel Egerton resigned the command to Colonel Cockburn, but though he acted as civil commissioner, the responsibility of all subsequent movements rested with Carnac. On the 9th, the army reached Tullygrum, and found it destroyed A report was spread that the enemy intended also to burn Chinchore, and even the capital itself. Carnac was panic struck, and though within eighteen miles of Poons. with eighteen days provisions in the camp, determined in the first instance, to open a negotiation with the enemy, and then to retreat Raghoba, who, with all his faults, was a gallant soldier, protested against this cowardice, so contingy to the British character, but the commissioners were so com pletely under the control of their own terrors, that they refused to wait even a single day for the result of their negotiations, threw their heavy guns into a pond, and begun their retreat that very night, hotly pursued by the enemy The rear guard, upon which the enemy s assaults were chiefly directed, was commanded by a young and gallant officer of the name of Hartley, who had been in the service about fourteen years, and gained the entire confidence of the serovs He received every attack with the utmost steadsness and animation, and drove back the enemy at every The seroys fought with perfect enthusiasm Had the command of the expedition been entrusted to him, he would, doubtless, have planted the British standard on the battlements of Poons but in this, as in many subsequent campaigns, while the army contained men of the most heroic mould, and of the highest talent, it was under the command of wretched dravellers

Disastrons pro gress of the army 17 9

Thermort's Jan., 1778.

The British force encamped, on the night of the 12th, at Wurgaum, and was assailed in the mornme by the guns brought up by the enemy during the darkness. The troops began to lose heart;

xm1 CODDIED'S EXPEDITION TO COVER.

the commander was bewildered, and declared that even a retreat had ceased to be possible. Captain Hartley in vain pointed out the mode in which it might be effected with little loss. Overtures were made to Nana Furnuvese who demanded the surrender of Raghoba, before he would listen to terms, and the commissioners would have complied with the demand if that prince had not saved them from this infamy by surrendering himself to Sindia Nana, Furnivese, however, appeared to be impracticable, and the commissioners turned to Sindia to whom they sent Mr. Holmes with full powers to treat This separate negotiation flattered his vanity and increased his unportance, and a convention, known as that of Wurgaum, was concluded under his auspices, which rescued the British army from destruction by the sacrifice of all the acquisitions which had been made since 1773. The advance of the army under Colonel Goddard across the country was countermanded, and for the first time in the history of British India, two hostages were given for the performance of the treaty. The failure of this expedition, which was owing to the interference of the imbecile Carnac, was a severe blow to the interests of the Company, who lost no time in dismosing him, as well as Colonels Exerten and Cockburn, from the service The Bom bay Presidency lost its reputation and its strength, and its only hope of safety now rested on the arrival of the Bengal nrmv

This expedition was despatched from the banks Goddard s ex reduce, 178. of the Jumna to Bombay through a thousand miles of unknown country, occupied by chiefs who were more slikely to prove hostile than friendly It was described by Mr Dandas, the Indian num. ter, as "one of the frantic military exploits of Hastings," but he forgot that it was by a miniary expons on friendly, one he negot that it was by a succession of such 'frantic exploits' 'that British p wer and prestige had been established in India by a handful of foreigners. The force consisted of between 4 000 and 5 000 men, under the command of Colonel Leshe, a fair soldier, but oncount to such an enterprise He crossed the Jumpa in Mur368

CHAP WAR PETWEEN FRANCE AND INCLAND. 1778, and was expected to reach the Nerbudda before it was swelled by the rains, but he wasted his time in discussions with petty chiefs, and in the course of five months had only advanced 120 miles He was accordingly displaced, but died before the news of his supercession reached him and the command of the army was entrusted by Hastings to Colonel Goddaid, one of the brightest names in the history of British India Through his energy, the expedition advanced at a rapid pace, notwithstanding the opposition of many of the chieftains The rais of Bhopal, however, treated Goddard with the greatest kindness and hospitality, and furnished his troops with ample supplies, though at the risk of bringing down on lumself the vengeance of the Mahratta powers This generous conduct in a season of difficulty has not been forgotten by the British government in the height of its pros-The house of Bhopal has been treated by successive Governors General with marked consideration, it has always been distinguished by its fidelity fo the English crown, and the present Muha rance is the only female decorated with the most exalted Order of the Star of India During the progress of Colonel Goddard's ex-War between France and nedition, intelligence was received in Calcutta of the declaration of war between France and England, and the difficulties of Hastings's position were greatly multiplied. The mission of St Lubin-who had not then been detected as a charlatan—and the countenance given to him by Nana Furnuvese, created the appreliension that the Mahrattas would be strengthened by a large French armament, and possibly under the command of the redoubted-Bussy, who had retired to France with a magnificent fortune, and married the neice of the minister, but was thirsting for service in the country where his exploits were still held in honour Hastings adopted the most vigorous measures to meet this new crisis, he augmented the army, he embodied the militia of Calcutta, to the number of a thousand, and sent Mr Elliott to the Raigh of Berar to secure his alliance by the offer of assisting him to office of Peshwa The negotiation, the success of which would have involved the Company in endlass complications, was happily nipped in the company in can'ss compactions, was happing nipped in the bud when the rap is heard that the Boml ay government were about to support the claims of Paghoba by force of arms, but he liberally supplied Colonel Goddard, with money and provi ions, and thus enabled him to reach Boor hancore without difficulty on the 30th of January, 17.9 So strict was the discipline which the Colonel munitained in his army, and so punctual were his payments, that the chiefs and per ple on the route hastened to furnish him with supplies At Boorhanpore, he heard of the disaster of the Bombay force at Wurgaum, and immediately turned off to Surat, a distance of 300 miles, which he travered in twenty days though he was without any map of the country Py this prompt movement he avoided a body of 20 000 Mahratta horse sent from Poona to intercept him. His timely arrival on the western coast proved the salvation of the Boml w Presidency The unexpected appearance of so large a force from the banks of the Jumna, augmented the reputation of the British power and confirmed its influence at the native courts, which the c avention of Wurgaum had impaired.

remesed Albs convention was repudrated equally by the east. Albs convention was repudrated equally by the cast. Bortlary Council and by Hastings, who directed Colonel Goldard to open a fresh negotiation with Nuna Furnure e, on the basis of the treaty of Poorunder but with an addition al stipulation for the exclusion of the French from the Viduratia dominuo. In the meanitume Sinda had granted a parger of twelve lies of rupees in Bundleeund to Ragholm, and sent him under a slender eccort to take po see ion of it. Raghobn, who was permitted to take his body guard and his guns with him attacted and overpowered the eccort on the route and escende to Sunt where he was homourably entertained by Colonel Goddard, who settled an allowance of half a lie of rupees a month on him. The whole sel eme was evidently a continuance of Sinda, to procure the release of receive possession of all the Peshwa's territories north of the Myhee, and that certain districts to the south should be made over to the Company. On the 10th of February, Goddard captured the noble city of Ahmedabad, the modern capital of the province, surrounded by walls of immense extent, and filled with a population of 100,000. The capital was scarcely reduced, when Goddard heard that Sindia and Holkar had forded the Nerbudda with 20,000 horse on the 29th of February, and were advancing to encounter him Sindia professed great enmity of Nana Furnivese, and great friendship for the English, and liberated the two hostages of Wurgaum, whom he had treated with hospitality He endeavoured to open negotiations, but Goddard could not fail to perceive that his chief object was to waste the season of operations Seven days were, therefore, allowed him for a definite reply, and as it did not prove satisfactory, Goddaid attacked and dispersed his troops on the 2nd, and again on the 14th of April, and cantoned his army for the season on the banks of the Norhudda On the side of Bengal, the war was conducted

Hor and August, with brilliant success. Sixty miles south-east of Agra lay the little independent principality of Gohud, erected by a Jant chieftain on the decay of the Moral empire The rana was incessantly threatened by the encroachments of Sindia, and solicited the protection of Hastings, who determined to take advantage of the appeal, and despatch an expedition, chiefly however with the view of creating a sala tary diversion It consisted of only 2,400 infantry, with a small body of cavalry, and a detail of European artillery, but it was commanded by Major Popham, one of the best soldiers in the service. He proceeded on his march in February. 1780, and having expelled the Mahratta invaders from the country, attacked the fortress of Lahar, without battering cannon, and carried it by the gallantry of his men E iles to the south of it by the fort of Gwalier, on the summit of a stupendous rock, scarped amost entirely round, and deemed throughout India impregnable Sir Fyre Coote, the veteran hero of the Carantic, now general in chief in Bengal, had declared that any attempt to capture it more especially without siege guns would be an act of madness. But Popham had set this "glorious object," as he termed it, before him, and determined to accomplish it. For two months he lay about the fortress, maturing his plans with such secrecy as to baile all suspense. On the night of the 3rd of August, the troops selected for the assault proceeded under the guid ance of Captain Brace to their destination Two companies of sepoys led by four Furopean officers, and followed by twenty English soldiers, applied the scaling ladders to the base of the scarped rock, sixteen feet high, then to a steep ascent of forty feet, and, lastly, to a wall of the height of thirty feet Captum Bruco with twenty sepoys climbed up the battlements before their approach was suspected. The bewildered garrison made but a feeble resistance, and, by boundered garrison made one a reconstruct, and by break of day, the Butish ensign was floating over the re-nowned fortress of Gwalior, while the Mahratta troops fled to carry the news to Sindia. The report of this brilliant achievement resounded through India, and will out the disgrace of the "infamous convention of Burgaum," as Hastings termed it, and which he considered "it worth Hastings termed it, and which he considered "it worth corose to oblicerte" Pophim was promoted to a majority, and then supersided by Colonel Carnac, who brought in additional force with him and not only invaded Malwa, but threatened Sandra's cap tal. That chief was obliged to quit Poona in haste together do the defence of his own dominions, and the object of Hastings in this expedition was fully nocomplished Carnac, however, proved une just to the cuter rese entrusted to hum, and allowed his free to be surrounded by the enemy, who old ged him to retreat, and har issued him at every step. Having at length procured a small sniply of provisions for his starving troops, by forced contributions. he called a council of war to d termine he future count Cuttain Bruce, who was fortunately with the ferce, uracd a nearly exhausted, he was elemnlered with 600 ret, and had only 2,000 tyled troops fit for duty; but he felt the importance of maintaining his commun cations with Goldard, which Nana was endeavouring to cut off, and he took up a strong rosition at Doo. sur, wherehe sustained the assault of 20 000 Mahratta lorse for two days On the third, the 12th of December, 1780, their callant and stilled general, Ramehunder Gunnesh, was killed, the army became distinted and fled precuitately with heavy loss. Basse in hal surren lered on the Fresions day to God lard with the loss of only thirteen of his men, and ho immediately moved down to the surport of Colonel Hartley, and, on surveying the fiel tof action, extressed his admiration of the rudicious position he had ch sen, and the valour of his This was all the reward that gallant soldier ever received for his achievements in this war, he was immediately after superseded, and the public service deprived of his talents at the time when they were most urgently needed

OMITOID OF

372

874 FAILEDE OF GODDARD'S EXPERIENCE TO FOOMA [CHAP

Hastings, alarmed by Hyders irruption into the Carnatic, considered it important to the sales of British interests in India to make peace

Poons, I 81 with the Mahrattas, and he proposed a treats on reasonable terms, through the raps of Nagpore, who, was still friendly to the English though he had solled the confederacy But on hearing of the distruction of Bullie's force in the Carnatic, in September, 1780, he considered their affairs desperate, and hesitated to become mediator, except on conditions to which the Governor General would not accode Goddard, conceiving that the desire for I cace on the part of the Poons durbar would be quickened by an advance towards Poons, ascended the gliants with a large force This expedition, which proved to be a total failure. was the only mistake of his career. After having mudiciously taken post at the Bhore ghaut, he was incessantly l arrassed by the Mal ratta army, and obliged at length to retreat, whon he was viceorously attacked by Holkar with 25,000 horse, and did not reach Bombay without the loss of 450, killed and wounded. The discomfiture of this renowned general was cord dired by the Mahrittus one of their most signal victories, and it was a fortunite circumstance that at this critical period the thoose of Sindia should have been engaged in defending his own territories, many hundred miles distint. This insuspecious expedition, which terminated on the 23rd of April, 1781, was the last operation of the war, although more than a twelvementif clapsed before the conclusion of peace.

The rula of Berar, to support appearances with his confe lerates, sent an army of 30,000 horse in Octol er, 1779, under his son Chimnaice towards Cuttack, for the ostensible purpose of invading Bengal, but he endeavoured to convince Hastings that his intentions were not hostile, by prolonging its march for seven months, and then employing it in the reduction of a fort in Onsea. To relieve Madras from the pressure of Hyders army, Hastings resolved to aid it by a force from Bengal. But a body of Bengal sepoys, who had recently been ordered to embark at Vizagapatam for Madras, objecting to a sea voyage on account of their caste prejudices, had murdered their officers, and committed great outrages. To avoid the recur rence of such a scene, Hastings determined to send the Bengal detachment along the coast by land, though the distance was seven hundred miles, and the route by through unknown and hostile provinces. This was another of those "frantic multary exploits' of Hastings, which served to overawe the native princes, and to estalli h the ascendancy of British power Colonel Pearce started with the army on the 9th of January, 1781, and it was on the line of march in Orasa that one half his force pen hed of cholera, and this is apparently the first notice which we have of the exit ence of a disease which has proved the mysterious scourge of the nineteenth century Colonel Pearce experienced the same friendly support from the raja of Nagpore, which that prince had previously given to Goddard. Hastings, with the view of detaching the raja from the confederacy, and chist ing him against Hyder, had made him a promise of system lace of rupees, of which three had already been paid. Chist najee was, at this time, in great distress for money, and Hastings engerly embraced the opportunity of officing the remunder of the sum, on the condition of a treaty of alliance, which was soon after concluded, with the proviso that 2,000 of the rajas horse elouid accompany the detachment, and act against Hyder. "Thus, remarked Hastings, with exultation, "have we converted an ostensible enemy into a declared friend, and transferred the most formadable member of the confederacy, after Hyder, to our own party, saved Bengal from a state of dangerous alarm, if not from actual invision, and all the horrors of a predatory war, and have completed the strength of Colonel Pearce a detachment."

The signal defeat of Sindia by Colonel Camae

The significant of Sindia by Colonel Cambridge Sindia ship of 1,7184 of Convinced him that he had every lining to lose by a contest with the English in the heart of his dominions, which might end in driving him across the Nerbudda without land or friends, and extinguishing his influence in the Mahratta commonwealth. He accordingly made over tures to Colonel Mur, which Hastings was but too happy to entertun, and they terminated in a treaty which was concluded on the 13th of October. The territory westfof the Jumin, from which he had been expelled by Major Popl am, was restored to him, with the except ion of the fort of Gw dor, which was reserved for the run of Gohuc, and he engaged to negotiate a treaty between the other belligerents and the British government, but, at all events, to stand neutral. The treaty gave great unbrigge to Anan Furnacese partly because it acknowledged Sindia as an independent power, but chiefly because the assumption of the office of plenipot. Interry served to increase lis power and his importance.

Treaty of Ealbye, 17th May 1162. Hastings a anxiety for peace with the Mahritta Regency was quickened by the arrival of a French armament on the coast which, under existing cirLviz inhabitants to the most revolting cruelties, leaving nothing in the track of his soldiers but burnt and desolated villages on Tantore.

In June, 1773, the Nabob again demanded the aid of the Madras government to crush the rais. 1-1 he had not, he said, fulfilled his engagements. ten lacs of ronces were still due from him, and he had, moreover, made appl cation to Hyder and to the Mahrattas for support. The Council indicaled the pregosterous idea of going to war with him for arrears They knew that he had exhausted his treasury to make good the extortionate fine imposed on him, of which he had been enabled to pay five-sixths by mortgaging his districts and his newels to the Dane, at Tranquebar, and the Dutch at Yegapatam. As to the overtures he had made to Hyder and the Mahrattas, they remarked that the treaty of 1769 had placed him under the protection of Hyder,

1773, deposed the raja and made over his country to the Nabob The Court of Directors, astounded by the report of this inframous proceeding, lost no time in expelling the President, Mr Wynch, from the service, and ordering the raja to be restored, placing lum for the future under the safeguard of British honour

The vacant chair at Madras was bestowed on Lord Piget, governo of Lord Pigot, who had gone out to Madras forty years before, and, after having risen to the post Dec 17.5 of President, returned to England with a fortune of forty lice of rupees, and was honoured with an Irish peerage The old man was now seized with the mania of going back to Madras as governor He found, on his arrival, that the system of peculation and extortion had intermediately attained great maturity, and he set humself to the task of clernsing the Augern stable, which set the whole settlement in a blaze To prevent the restoration of Tanjore to the raja the Nabob spared no art or intrigue, he went so far as to offer a bribe of sixty lacs of rupees to the governor himself, if he would only postpone the transfer, but the orders of the Court of Directors were peremptory, and Lord Pigot proceeded in person to Tam re, and seated the rais on the throne on the 11th of Apul. 1776, leaving an English garuson for the diffence of the But the restoration was no sooner proclaimed that Mr Paul Benfield came forward and asserted that he had an assignment on the revenues of Tanjore from the Nabob of sixteen lacs of runces, and a claim on the standing ground seven lacs for sums lent to the husbandmen Nothing can more clearly demonstrate the total demoralization of the public service at the Madras Presidency than the fact that this Benfield, occupying an inferior post, not worth more than 200 or 300 rupees a month, and keeping the grandest equipages at Madras should not consider it by any means preposterous to assert that he hal advanced twenty three lacs of rupees on the revenues of the province. The Council called for vouchers, which he was unable to produce, but he assured them that the Nabob was doubt, as the claim had evidently been concocted Letween Them to d fraud the Company and the rate deliberation the Council, on the 29th of Max, 1776 rejected the clam Deper on and ×12.

But the Council soon repented of the act of virtue. They and the other members of the civil 1 0-7 service were creditors of the Nabob to the extert of a crore and a half of ruples, and they discovered that ly rejecting the claim of Benfiel! they had impured the r he'l on the revenues of Tamore The vote was reconsidered Lord Pigot and his friends strenuously resisted the proceedings but a majority of seven to five resolved that the ass 27 ments made to Paul Benfield were valid. The dispute was widened by other questions, and both parties became inflamed Lord Pigot unconstitutionally suspended two of the members of Council and ordered the commandant. Sir Pobert Fletcher, to be placed under arre t Fletcher was the officer whem Chyc had do my sed ten years before during the mutiny of the officers in Bengal which he had fomented but whom the Court of Directors had, out of opposition to Clive re tored to the The majority of the Council then assumed the

PUMBOLD, GOVERNOR OF MADRAS 382

improved by the appointment of Sir Thomas Rumbold, who had been trained up in the Bengal school of corruption, as his successor The Northern Sirears formed the only territory from which the Madras Presidency

The state of affairs at Madras was not at all derived any revenue, but the malversations of the collectors left but a small portion of it to the state The Court of Directors had, therefore, been induced to order five of the members of Council to proceed to the province, and after diligent investigation, to place the settlement on a satisfactory basis Sir Thomas Rumbold, immediately on his arrival at Madras, cancelled the commission, and ordered the zemindars to repair in person to the Presidency, a distance of 600 miles. through a country without a road The zemindars who were able to afford the cost, were required, on reaching the Presidency, to transact business with the governor alone, to the exclusion of the members of Council The principal zemindar. Viziram raj, who was, in fact, a focal prince, pleaded the murv which his affairs must suffer during his absence, as an excuse for not leaving his estates But his brother hastened to the Presidency, and having given a bribe of a lac of rupees to the governor secretary, was appointed dewan, in suite of all his brother's remonstrances, and thus obtained the entire centrol and management of the zemindary Sir Thomas Rumbold himself was found to have remitted four lacs and a half of rulees to England after he had been six months at Madias, and the suspicions to which so large a remittance gave rise, were never satisfactorily removed The treaty with the Nizam in 1768, had given . the reversion of the Guntoor Sircar to the Company. after the death of his brother, Basalut Jung That prince.

FCUAR

with Adom for the capital of his little principality, was am bitious of increasing his power and territory, and had gra dually formed a French corps under M Lally, which received recruits and supplies through the little scaport of Mootar Il. The Madras government repeatedly remonstrated against the the Arram and to neutralize his hostility as a member of the grand confederacy. This friendly disposition was likewise improved by the discovery he had recently make, that Hyder. Also ambition had led him to send a mission to Delhi, and to obtain a summa from the phantom of an emperor conferring on I im the while of the Hyderabad territories. The Franch troops, which Bisalut Jung was constrained to dismiss, were nam distely taken into the service of the Niram and the max ty which their presence in the Decemu spired was greatly augmented Sir Thomas Rumbold remonati ited with great schemence against this interference of the Governor General in the political movements of the Madras Presidency, but the measure of his transgressions was now full and in January, 1781, the Court of Directors after passing the severest censure on his conduct, expelled him from the situation which he had filled and disgraced for more than two years But he unicapated their decision by deserting his post and returning to England, as soon as the war with Hyder, which I is follies had provoled, was on the eve of breaking out *

Before entering on the narrative of the second f memor of Mysore war in 1780 a brief teview of Hydei s mogress, after he had been constrained to make peace with the Mahiattas in 1772, appears desirable. The confusion created in the Mahratta counsels by the murder of the young Poshwa, Narayun Rao, afforded Hyder an oppor tamty of enlarging his territories which he was not slow to implove In November of that year he subjugated the principality of Cools which offered the noblest resistance, and was therefore, treated with mole than ordinary barbanty" The sum of five runces was offered for the head of each male, and Hyder took his seat in state to distribute the rewards After 700 heads had thus been paid for, two of surpassing beauty were lail at his feet, and he was so startled by their comel ness as to order the execution to cause. The circum sto ce is remailable as this is said to have been the only instance in which he ever exhibited any emotion of pity He · See Appendix, pursued this career of conquest with uninterrupted success. and in one short cum ugu, extending from September, 1773, to I chruary, 1771, recovered all the districts of which he had been dispossessed by the Mahrattas, and strengthened his power in Malalar. In 1775, he reduced the fortress of Bellary, belonging to Basalut Jung, whom he construned to purchase peace by the sacrifice of a lac of pagodas. He then proceeded to extinguish the power which Moran Rao, the years in building up, and before the end of 1776, had extinguished the independence of Savanoor

Nam and Hyder 17 6.1778

Razhoba, during his vicissitudes, had been in Pethwa stack constant communication with Hyder Ah, who had acknowledged his title, and furnished him, from time to time, with funds to the extent of sixteen lacs of rupees, receiving in return a confirmation of all the territories he had recently conquered. The cabinet at Poona, alarined at his encroachments, formed an alliance with the Nizum, horing, at the same time, to demolish all the hopes of Raglioba A Mahratta army of 30,000, and a Hyderabad army of 40,000, accordingly took the field in 1776, but were unable to achieve any success. The invasion was renewed the next year, but the general of the Agam was rendered mactive by the gold of Hyder, and the Mahratta commanderin chief was obliged to retreat in consequence of the desertion of one of lus generals, whom Hyder had corrupted with six lacs of rupees The year 1778 was marked by the most active and successful exertions on the part of Hyder, and at "the close of it he was enabled to contemplate the feetile banks of the Listing as the northern boundary of his dominions In May, 1779, he attacked the Nabob of Kurpa, who had sided with his opponents in the recent war, and annexed all his territories

The resentment which Hyder manifested at gotiations with the refusal of the government of Madras to afford him any assistence, in 1772, when present to extremity by the Mahrattas, did not prevent his making overtures to them, in 1773, but all his efforts to extablish a friendly intercourse were defeated by the machinations of the Nabob, Mahomed Ali. Hyder then turned to the French at Pondicherry, where his envoys were received with great eagerness by the governor, M. Bellecombe. The invoterate hostility and mocessant invasions of the Mahrattas, however, induced him again to court the alliance of the English, and he offered his assistance towards the establishment of Raghoba at Poona, asling, in return, only for a supply of stores and arms, and a small body of troops, for which he was willing to make a suitable payment. The proposal, though acceptable both at Calcutta and Madras, was not entertained with any degree of cordulaty.

386

was not entertained with any degree of cordiality

In the month in which this negotiation was in Capt re of Pondial erry progress, information was received of the commoncement of hostilities between France and England, and a force was soon after sent against Pondi cherry, the fortifications of which had been completely restored The place was defended by the gallant Bellecombe for ten weeks with great constancy, but capitulated at length in the month of October, 1778, when the garrison was permitted to maich out with all the honours of war The governor of Madras, in announcing this success to Hyder, offered to renew the negotiations, and to place a resident at his court, but intimated, at the same time, his intintion to send an expedition to capture Mahe This was a small Frei ch settlement on the Malabar coast, through which Hyder had, for three years, been in the habit of receiving recruits and. supplies of every description from Europe, and the continued occupation of which by his French allies was to him a matter of great importance. He replied that he considered all the foreign settlements, English, French and Dutch, equally inder his protection, that he should support the French gurnson with all his strength, and retainte any attack by an invasion of the Carnatic Hyder's troops accordingly assisted in the defence of the foit, and his colours were hoisted side by side with those of the French, but the place sur cendered in March, 1779 Hyder did not disguise his resent ment from the governor of Vadras, and the tone of his communications created so much alarm as to induce Sir Thomas Rumbold to send the celebrated missionary, Swarts, to allay his feelings, and to sound his absosition Hyder received the missionary with great respect, but nothing was guided by the mission except the most unequivocal evidence of his hostility.

Under joins
While Hyder's feelings were thus exasporated
the confederacy against the Madris authorities, he received in-telli-rence that Colonel Harper, who had been sent to take possession of Guntoor, was marching through the province of Kurpa, which he had recently conquered, with out even asking his permission His indignation was roused to the highest pitch, and he declared that he would neither allow an English force to occupy Guntoor, or to proceed to Adon; and his officers were ordered to resist the progress of Colonel Harper by an armed force Basalut Jung was likewise obliged, by the menaces of Hyder and of the Nizam. to request that the march of the English troops might be countermanded, and the surear restored, but with this request the Madras Government did not see fit to comply Meanwhile, an envoy arrived at Seringaputam from Poona, to represent that Hyder, equally with the Mahrattas, had reason to complain of the brench of their engagements by the English Government, and to request him to join the con •federacy which had been formed to expel them from India The Mahratta ministers offered to adjust all their differences with him, to relinquish all claims for arrears of chout, to limit his future payments to eleven has of rupees a year, and to confirm the grants of territory up to the kistin, made by Raghoba Hyder accepted these proposals with avidity. and agreed to put forth his whole strength for the exter-mination of the British power A few months after, Sir

222

Thomas Rumbold sent Mr Grey to Semngaputam to offer an allance with the Mysore state, but he wag treated with studied indignity, and informed that the offer of friendship came too late. Osman Hyders minister, in the course of the discussions tools occasion to remark that he had been at Madras and had seen how the English treated their allies "Mahomed Ah he said, shewed me several letters he had received from the King of England but he complained of the laces of pagodas which each one had cost him

Hyder's preparatons for war 1780 For many months Hyder had been making preparations for war on the largest scale, super intending every arrangement in person, though then in his seventy eighth year, and by the end of June, had equipped the most efficient force ever collected under the standard of a native prince It consisted of 90 000 horse an I foot, a large proportion of which had been trained and was commanded by European officers It was supported by a powerful artillery, directed by European science and skill, and its commissariat was admitably organized by a brahmin of the name of Poornea At Madras no preparation was made to meet the coming storm. In a spirit of infatuation which has no parallel in our Indian history, the members of government refused even to acknowledge the danger, and tle idea of an invasion became the topic of ridicule. The President informed the Court of Directors with peculiar satis faction that the country was in perfect tranquility, and that there was "the greatest prospect that this part of India wild remain quiet' Even so late as the 17th of July while Hyder was advancing through the passes the comi rander in chief declared that all any rehensions were ground 1000

These illusions were speed by dispelled Hyder, an the Caraca, having completed the equipment of his army, and both day 130 ordered prayers for its auccess to be put up in the m sques and offerings to be made in the Hindoo temples, burst on the Caracate, through the Changama pass, on the 20th of July, 1780, and his progress was marked by the blaze of towns and villages He appeared anxious, on this occasion, to exhaust all the resources of cruelty which a mind never sensible to pity could suggest. The wretched inhabitants were required to emigrate to Mysore with their flocks and herds, and those who lingered about their homesteads, were mutilated without discrimination. With the exception of four forts held by four English lieutenants every fort, as far as the Coleroon, was surrendered by the conmandants of Mahomed Alt, whom Hyder Alt had corrupted The incredulity of the Council was at length dispelled by the announcement that his troops had surrounded Conjeveram, only fifty miles from Madras But it was not till black clouds of smoke were seen in every quarter from St Thomas's Mount, distant only nine miles from Madras, that any order was issued for the movement of troops to repel the enemy. The main body of the British army encamped at the Mount was about 5,200 strong, and the force sent to occupy Guntoor, now commanded by Colonel Bailie, amounted to about 2,800 men It was of the last importance that a junction z-ovo men at was of the last importance that a junction should be at opce effected of these two bodies, but Hyder had laid siege to Arcot, which contained the few military stores which the Nabob possessed, and, after a succession of distracted councils at Madras, it was determined to make an effort to relieve it Sr Hector Munro, the general in chief, therefore, proceeded to Conjeveram, and Colonel Baillie, who had arrived within twenty five miles of Madras, was ordered to make a circuitous march of fifty miles to join him.

Colonel Baille had reached the braks of the mercanes. Cortella, then nearly dry, but brille to be swelled; the meaning dry, but brille to be swelled; the stream became imprachle, and he was unable to cross it before the 4th of September Hyder immediately despatched his son, Tippoo, with the flower of his army and orbiters guns, to arrest the progress of this branch. Thoron whole of the Mysore army. It was in vain that his men performed productes of valour, and repeatedly stormed the batteries The enemy had chosen their positions with great skill, and poured in a destructive fire The European soldiers. though they had sustained thirteen attacks, and were reduced to 300, still called out to be led against their assailants, but Baillie refused to sacrifice the lives of these brave men, and held out a flag of truce They had no sooner laid down their arms, however, than Hyder's men rushed upon them, and would have butchered the whole body, if the French officers had not interposed to save them Of 86 officers, 70 were billed or wounded, and the whole army, with all its stores, laggage and compments was totally and pretrievably lost. Sir Hector Munro's force was only two miles distant at the time, and if he had came up during the engagement, the defeat would have been turned into a victory, and the for tunes of the war completely changed. On the following day he threw his heavy guns into the great tank, or bond, at Conseveram, and retreated in haste and disorder to Madras, hotly pursued by the enemy, and losing baggage at every turn And thus terminated in disaster and disgrace, this brief campaign of twenty-one days, in which the heroism of the men formed a melancholy contrast to the utter incompetence of their generals A vessel was immediately dispatched to Calcutta

Handras sees, with information of the deaster. To the emburrassment of a war with the Maharatas, was now ad led a war with Hjder, which had commenced with the greatest reverse the English arms had hitherto sustained in India. But never did the genus of Hastings appear to more advantage than in this emergency. "All my hopes," Ic wrote, "of aggrandiang the British name and enlarging the interests of the Company, hive given instant place to the more urgent call to support the existence of both in the Carnatic, nor did I hesitate a moment to abandon my own views for such an object." Mr Whitel III, the governor of Ma Ira-who had persisted in retuning Guntoor, after he had received orders from Calcutta to restore it, was suspended from his office to the great satisfaction of the settlement, though, as office to the great satisfaction of the settlement, though, as Hastings remarked, "the creature made some show of resist ance. All the toops which could be spared were immediately despatched, together with fifteen lacs of rapees, for it e sole use of the army, and not as a crul supply, and such was the despatched, together with fifteen lacs of rapees, for the sole use of the army, and not as a crid supply, and such was the energy displayed on this occasion, that the whole embarkation and all the measures projected for so great an occasion, were completed within three weeks. The veteran, Sir Eyre Ocote, had succeeded Sir John Chavering, as commander in chief in Bengal, and was solicited to proceed to Madras and restore had succeeded Sir John Clavering, as commander in chief in Bengal, and was solicited to proceed to Madras and restore the honour of the Bittish name. He was now advanced in years, and feeble in health, but he would not decline this honour-ble summons to the scene of his early trumplis. But the boldest measure which Hastings adopted at this criss, was to stop the Company's investment, and apply the funds to the expedition. Even this provision, however, was found to be insufficient. It was a subject of exultation, that during the eight years of his administration, he had not only discharged debts to the extent of a crore and a half of rupces, but replemished the treasury with double that sum, it was, therefore, with no ordinary chargin that he was now obliged to have recourse to a loan.

Sir Eyre Coote reached Madras on the 5th of was teven in the could be compared the provided and the difficulty of of training draft.

Defence of Manterson November, and found it equipment of the army 100 November, and found it equipment of the army so wretched, and the difficulty of of truming druft and carriage cattle in a country swept 1 y hostile cavalry so great, that it was the 17th of January 1 cloro he was able to move his army. Hyder had resumed the siege of Arcot, and its small Furopean garrison, after holding out for hix weeks, was obliged to reture to the citaded while Clive had defended for fifty days. But the Nabola brahmin commandant, under Hyder's influence, spread a spint of disaffection among the native toops to such an extent that the Furi kan offerers had no alternative but to equipment.

the same time engaged in besieging five other forts, one of which, Wandewash, was defended by Lieutenni Flint and a brother officer, with sich romante valour and such military skill that the sege became one of the most honourable events of the war. This distinguished officer, however, received no other reward for his eminent services but the appliance of Sir By re Coote, whose admiration of the resources which had been employed knew no bounds. The Court of Directors refused even to promote him to the command of a company. Soon after, Sir Fyre Coote revived the drooping spirits of the army by the capture of Carangolly, which Hyder had fortified with great care.

On the 8th of February, the general marched But' a of Ports southward to Cuddalore where he was subjected to the most mortifying embarrasement for supplies, which he could receive only by sea. The hostile armies re mained mactive for four months Coote unable to move for want of provi ions, and Hyder dreading an encounter with On the 18th of June. Coote attached the fortified and well provi ioned temple of Chillumbrum but met with a repul e Hyder was elated by this his first succe s against the ren wheel English commander, and resolved to risk a general engagement. Though on the verge of eighty, he marched up to Cuddalore a hundred males in two days and a half, and took up a strong position in its neighbourhood which he began to fortify Coote ignorant of the nature or strength of the enemy's works, resolved as his last resource to sally forth and attack them His battering guns were sent on board the vess. I lying off the town, together with every other impediment, and the troops marched to the assault with the remaining provisions, enough only for four days on their backs. After advancing a little distance, Coote per ceived a road which Hyder had been cutting through the sand hills the previous night, and immediately pushed his detachments through the gap in the teeth of a heavy cannon ade. After a long and arduous engagement, of six hours duration, the valour of the British troops was rewarded by a complete victory, with the loss of only 300 fier. The result of the action was most decisive. Hyder, who had lost 10,000 soldiers, abandoned his designs on Trichinopoly, and Tippoo raised the siege of Wandewash, which the gallant Lint still continued to defend.

The Bengal brigade sent down the coast under

Pattle of rolliore, 7th Colonel Pearce, lind been recruited after the havoc of the cholera and reached Pulicat, forty miles north of Madras, in July, 1781 Hyder detrohed Tippoo with a large force to intercept it, and Coote mreked 150 miles from Porto Novo to form a junction with it, which he effected on the 2nd of August A similar movement, even with less foresight and vigour on the part of Sir Hector Munro in the preceding year, would have saved Baillies army from destruction. Hyder had unaccountably allowed Coote to march through the country without that obstruction which he could have offered at every step, but he determined to make up for his neglect by opposing his return with great vigour, and advanced with the whole of the Mysore army to the spot where a twelvementh before he had exterminated Baillies force He considered this a most fortunate spot for another battle, and his astrologers predicted a certain vectory, if it took place on the same lucky day of the same lunar month the 11th Ramzan, or the 27th of August The engagement, called after the neighbouring village, Pollilore, lasted through out the day, but the result was doubtful, both parties firing a salute for victory The action cost Hyder 2 000 men, while the loss on the side of the English was about 400 The next day, Coote s army was employed in the melancholy duty of interring the remains of Colonel Baillie's detachment in the same graves with their own dead. Vellore, one of the few fortresses left to the English, was at this time stratened for provisions and the commandant represented the impossibility of holding out emless he was refiered Coote advanced to raise the seige, and Hyder marched to prevent the attempt. The armies met again for Part of the Card time during the year at Solingur, on the Spr. 1 st 27th of September 1781 Hyder having come to the conclusion that Coote could not, or would not attack him on that day, had allowed his cattle and the drivers and followers to d sperse and the rapid movement of the British columns took him by surprise Coote obtained a complete victory, which owing to his admirable dispositions involved the loss of only 100 men, while that of the Mysore army exceeded a 000 Within a few days however. Vellore was again reduced to extremity for supplies, and though the monsoon had set in Coote made three forced marches and prov visioned it for three months Hyder did not venture again to attack him, and the British army soon after retired into cantonments at Madras, after a campaign in which all the state of his equipments and the total absence of a commissariat. The question of filling up the vacant chair at Madras now came up before the Court of Directors. In the brief period of seven years, two governors Madras, 1781.

envernor of

plans of Hyder were balled by the consummate strategy of Coote, and Coote s expectations were defeated by the wretched had been dismissed by them and one suspended by Hastings, for gross mistonduct, and a fourth had been deposed by his own Conneil and died in confinement. The service was thoroughly demoralised and it was therefore determined to try the experiment of placing the government in the hands of a new man uncontaminated with the general corruption, or a new man uncommunicat with the general correption, and a stranger to all local associations who might be expected to bring dignity to the effice, and restore vigour to the administration. The choice fell on Lord Macartery a nobleman of much political experience and unbued with a high sense of much political experience and undued with a nighteener of honour. He reached Madras on the 2'nd of June and brought the first intell gence of the declaration of war with the Dutch. Their principal settlement on the coast at Negaratam 160 mil a south of Madras, was at the time garrisoned by a body of 6500 troops, and Hyder Ah lost no time in opening negotiations with the chief, which resulted in a treaty on the basis of mutual co operation against the English I ord Macarteny was anxious to prevent this formidable accession to the resources of Hyder, and resolved to attach the town, while he was able to reckon upon the assistance of the fleet, before the approaching change of the monsoon Without abstracting a single soldier from the army of Sir Eyre Coote, who discountenanced the expedition, he drew together a force from Tanjore and Madras, and placed it under the command of Sir Hector Munro The fleet contributed a large body of marines and seamen, to whose steadiness and Capture of gallantry the early surrender of the place was Negapatam chiefly owing It fell on the 12th of November,

896

1781 and Trincomulee

and was found to contain, in addition to a large quantity of military stores, two annual investments of great value In the following January, Trincomaice, the noblest harbour in the island of Ceylon, was also wrested from the Datch. The pressure of events on the coast forced the Armneement with Mahomed Al 2nd Dec.

question of the Carnatic revenues on the considera tion of the government at Madras and Calcutta The heavy expenses of the war fell exch sively on the Company s treasury, the province itself contributed nothing to us own defence, as the Nabob and his creditors absorbed the little revenue which was raised While the troops of Coote were on half rations, the officers of the Nabob were selling the provisions collected for their support, and remitting the proceeds to his private purse. All his efforts were directed to impede, and often to counteract the movements of the British troops Not a single soldier in his pay was sent to Cootes camp while his officers betrayed every fort to the enemy and I is own brother made over the fortress of Chundergirce to Hyder, with all the grain stored in it-for a consideration. The venulty and political profligacy of the Nabobs court, unmatched in India, was the constant theme of Cootes indignant remonstrance. The nuisance became at length insupportable, and the Anbob, after repeated evisions, was constrained to resign the revenues of the Carnatic for a period of five years, at the least, with a reservation of one sixth for his personal expenditure and for his criditors, because Colonel Brathwate, who had assisted at the

of the enemy, he was surprised by Tippoo, with 20,000 horse and foot, and 20 guns The valour and constance of British and 100, and 20 guns. Ino valour and construct of British troops have seldom been more conspicuous than on this trying occasion. During twenty six hours of unremitted conflict they sustained without flinching the repeated charges of the Uysore horse, and the fire of their cannon, but sunk at length from wounds and exhaustion, and would have been annihilated by the troops of Tippoo, but for the generous exertions of the Freuch officers, who appreciated their heroism This di aster was counterbalanced by a victory on the opposite coast Tellicherry, a fortified factory, and the only English possession in Milibur, had sustained a sego of eighteen months by a My sore force which had been reinforced, made a sortie, and captured 1,200 of the enemy, together with all their bagginge, equipments, and 60 pieces of caunon The reverse thus inflicted on and 60 peeces of cannon. The reverse thus inflicted on Hyder emboldened the conquered Nairs to rise throughout the province, and created a volent reaction in Coorg.

Tetral des Hyder began to give way to despondency. He received in the been folled in every engagement with Sirest Eyre Coote in which he was not signally defeated flew and deceived, as he supposed, by his French allies, who had engaged to come to his assistance, but had failed him for twenty months. The revolt, kindled on the western cost, might extend to his capital. The Governor General had succeeded in detaching Sindra, and the Nizam and Bhonslav from unite with the English, and compel him to accede to a perce which would deurive him of all the advantages of the war, unless he consented to resign to them the territories he had acquired between the Toombudra and the Kistna, and ibandon all claims on the policars south of that river. He disbuildered his feelings to his minister. Poornea He lamented his folly in having provoked a war with the English There were, he admitted, mutual grounds of dissatisfaction, but still he might have made them his friends notwithst uiding the intrigues of the wretched Nabob "The defeat of many Brathwaites and many Baillies," he said, "will not crush them I may rum their resources by land, but I cannot diy up the sea, and I must be exhausted by a war in which I can gain nothing by fighting" He resolved therefore, to abandon all operations in the Carnatic, and to concentrate his efforts on the western coast He had issued justructions for the entire destruction of the districts on the Coronandel coast, that he might leave no vestige of human habitation behind him, and had ordered the defences of Arcot to be undermined, when all these gloomy forebodings were at once dissipated by the appearance of the long Expected French armament on the coast Early in 1781, the French government made preparations for the despatch of a powerful fleet and army to India, under the command of the veteran Bussy.

292

but the canture of two successive convoys by English cruizers retarded the execution of the plan. The first division at length reached the Mauritius, and was at once sent forwardto the Coromandel coast The death of the admiral during the voyage gave the command of the fleet to Suffrein, an officer of extraordinary enterprise and resources. He made the coast off Pulicat with twelve sail of the line and eighteen transports, as Admiral Hughes was returning in January, 1782, from the capture of Trincomalee Hughes, who had only six vessels with him, was fortunately reinforced by three others which had arrived from England, and bore down on the French squadron, and succeeded in cutting off six of the transports. The action was indecisive, and Suffrein proceeded to Porto Novo, where he landed 2,000 French soldiers and 1,000 Africans. Soon after, Hyder had an interview with the

1,000 Africans Soon after, 17) are natural referred to the French commanders, when it was determined to attempt the reduction of Cuddalore, and await the arrival of Bussy for larger operations. The extensive fortifications of that place had been incantiously left in charge of only 400 sepoys and five artillerymen, and it surrendered without any show of resistance. A few weeks after, the important post of Permacoil was captured by Hyder. On the 12th of April, there was a second action between the fleets, but without any decisive result, and both the admirals were obliged to

reture and return there disabled vessels

Coote began now in his turn to despond, he considered the a-pect of affairs, not only embarrassing, but even desperate. In the hope of bring-results of the coordination, he marched to Wandewash, which Jase, 18: rassing, but even desperate. In the hope of bringing on a general action, he marched to Wandewash, which was besieged by the united armies of the French and of Higher, but they refused the challenge, and retired to Pondicherry. With the view of drawing them from the position which they had strongly fortified Coote determined to attempt the capture of Arnee, the chief depot of Higher in the southern provinces. Tippoo was sent to protect it, and an engagiment ensued on the 2nd of June, the only result of which was the capture of one gun and cloven tumbrils, while Higher was enabled to accomplish his object of rescuing his atreasure, and stores from danger. Six weeks after, he drew a young officer, who had been entrusted with a large detectment, into an ambuscade, enveloped it with his cavalry, and inflected on it the loss of two guns and 166 men.

400

other result than to defeat the views of the French on that town Suffrem retired to Cuddalore where he repaired the damage his fleet had sustained with incredible speed and energy, and then sailed southwards Lord Macartney had received intelligence that a second French force had armed at Point de Galle, and that Bussy himself was immediately expected on the coast. He began to tremble for the safety both of Negapatam and Trancomalce, and urged Admiral Hughes to follow the French fleet with all expedition But the energy of that officer by no means corresponded with his slill and courage, and he was, moreover, jerlous of any in terference with his command, and in this instance did not besitate to sacrifice the interests of his country to his own capuce Suffrem hastened to Galle, embarked the force of 2,400, which had recently arrived, and lauded them at Trin The siege was pushed with extraordinary vigour, and the garrison was obliged to capitulate on the 31st of August, though on the most honourable terms Four days later the dilatory Hughes looked into the harbour, and saw the French colours flying on the ramparts The next day witnessed the fourth action between the two fleets, but though it lasted throughout the day, it terminated like all which had preceded it, without any result The approach of darkness separated the combatants This was the last and the severest naval engagement of the year, which was marked as much by the exertions of the fleets, as by the mactivity of the armies Admiral Hughes returned to Madras, and an-

H gles sails for B bay 15th U tober 1782. nounced the necessity of proceeding forthwith to Bombay to refit his vessels, which had kept the ser during the monsoon of 1781, and had sustained serious damage in four successive general actions
The governor
represented to him, the desperate condition to which the interests of the Company would be reduced by his departure, and carnestly pressed him to remain Hyder, he said, was master of the Carnatic, the possession of Trincomilee would retiograde movement he considered a great misfortane, but it proved the salvation of his army On the 19th of November Tippoo overtook the returns force, which was constrained to fight every step of its march, and arrived at dusk on the banks of the Pannani, but, regarding them as a sure and easy prey, he neglected to watch their movements, and the colonel, having discovered a ford, passed his whole army over under cover of the night, and reached the town of Pannani the nixt day 'On the 29th of November Tippoo made an assault in four columns on the British aimy, but was driven back with great loss. He then determined to block ade the force, and wait the arrival of his heavy equipments, when, on the 12th of December, his whole army was seen to strike its tents and march off to the eastward. A dromedary peach of 11gder and 11st hecember untell gence of the death of Hyder Ah. His cessful adventurers in the modern history of India Index death Poornea, a Mahratta brahmin, the ablest of secondal ITE. Hyder's ministers, in conjunction with his distinguished colleague, Kishen Rao, a Canarese brahmin, assumed the management of affairs, and acted with consummate prudence Tippoo, the son and successor of Hyder, was four hundred miles distant, and an Asiatic army, deprived of its head, always becomes a scene of nutrigue and confusion Hyder's death was therefore carefully conceiled in the camp. The body was embalmed and sent under an escort to the capital as it had been usual to despatch chests of viluable plander All answers to letters were issued, and all orders publis ed in his name, and his thosed palanquin, with the accustomed retinue moved out at the usual hour from the canvas inclosure of his tent. Tippoo, on receiving intelligence of his father's death, immediately abandoned the wistern campung.

the advanced age of eighty, leaving behind him the reputation of one of the ablest, most enterprising, and most suc-

and hastened to join the armyon the Coramandel coast v-hich he reached on the 2nd of January The troops were gratified by the payment of arrears, and a liberal donative . the ministers who had maintained the royal authority at this difficult CILLS were confirmed in office and Tippoo at once succeeded to the command of a splendid army of 100 000 men and to a treasury filled with three crores of rupees, besides an accu mulation of rewels and valuables, which Poornea declared to be of countless value

tention to the expulsion of the English force from the western provinces, justly fearing lest they should be transferred to the Mahrattas, whom Hastings was urging to attack him General Matthews, instead of concentrating his force, which did not exceed I 600, at the most defensible point, frittened it away in small detachments, and the troops were allowed to deperse over the country in search of rlunder Bednore was, however, defended with great valour, and it was not surrendered till it had become a hear of ruins, and further resistance was hopeless. The capitalities was violated as usual, and the men and officers were marched off in irons, and consigned to dungeons Tippoo fired a salute for this his first victory over the English troops, and then descended to the coast and invested Mangalore, the siege of which is one of the most memorable events of the war The strength of the garrison, at the commencement of it was only 1,800. while the investing force under Tippoo amounted to 100,000 with 100 guns. The command of the fort had devolved ea Colonel Campbell of the 42nd Highlanders, and a brighter name is not to be found in the annuls of Briti h India. It would exceed the limits which can be assigned to this memorable conflict in this brief epitome, to enter into any detail of the siegy or to describe how General Macleod who was twice sent to relieve it, was on each occasion canoled by Tippeo and left his task incomplete, and how an intermediate convention was disgracefully violated and the privations of the brave garrison augmented. It may be sufficient to state that the colonel and his troops defended the place for nine months with un urpresed resolution again t it e whole army of Tippoo and did not capitulate until their number was reduced to 8a0, and those mere skeletous . Whilst Tippoo was thus wasting his strength

Whilst Tippoo was this westing his strength and his reputation in a siege which cost him half his army, it is absence of a Mysore army from the southern provinces, and the peace with France enabled the Madara government to send a powerful force across the Pemusufa into the heart of Mysoie This able plan was devised and executed by Colonel Fullarton, who had embraced the military profession late in life, but exhibited talents of a very high order, and would have brought the war with Tippoo to an honourable termination, if he had not been thwaited by the folly of the Madris authorities His force consisted of 13,600 men, but the native portion of it was twelve mouths in arrears. On the 15th of November, he captured the renowned fortress of Palghaut, and on the 26th occupied Combatoor, on the 28th, he had made every preparation for an immediate advance on Seringapatam, while the Mysore army was detained before Mangalore The capital was within his grasp, but before night he received orders not only to suspend operations, but to relinquish all the districts he had occupied. To explain this singular requisition, it is to be remarked that while Hastings was engaged in urging the Mahrattas, in accordance with the treaty of Salbye, to compel Tippoo to make peace on pain of hostilities, Lord Macarteny, in defiance of the prohibition of the Supreme Government, to which, on such questions, he was entirely subordinate, opened negotiations with Tippoo, and by a singular infatuation, voluntarily agreed to a suspension of arms till a reply was received. So ignorant was the Governor of Madras of native habits, as not to know that any direct offer of peace to a native prince, rendered peace on honourable terms impossible Tippoo took no notice of the proposals for three months, and then sent one of the most astute of his officers to cozen the President and Conneil at Madras After a month passed in jesuitical dillomacy, " the envoy proposed that two gentlemen should be deputed to Tippoo to expedite the negotiations The silly Council swallowed the bait, and even aftirmed that this was a proposal which exactly met their wishes The object of Tip poo was gruned, and he was thus enal led to represent at every durbar m India that the English government had sent commissioners all the way from Madras to Mangalore to sue for mace It was at this period and under the influence of this agent, that the commis ioners instructed Colonel Fullarton to suspend hostilities, and exacuate his conquests; but he had just heard of the perfi hous violation of the convention of Man galore, and though he ceased to prosecute the war, determined to retain the districts he had conquered Discussions soon after arose between the entry of Tippoo and the commissioners, n garding the release of the prisoners and the surrender of Mangal re, which were referred to Lord Macartney 8th of December the Council met and reviewed their position, their finances were runed, their credit was broken, and the confidence of the Supreme Government was gone But, instead of ordering Colonel Fullarton with his powerful army to rush on to Tu poo s capital, while he was occupied at Man galore, and end the war by one bold strol e, they directed him to reluciush all his conquests, and retire within the limits which they prescribed although Lippoo a officers had violated their engliments, and retained all the districts they had overrun in the Carnatic, which they were equally bound to evacuate The missionary Swartz met Colonel Fullarton at. the foot of the ghauts as he was marching back, and exclaimed with astonishment, "Is the peace so certain that you quit all before the negotiation is ended. The possession of these two countries would have kept Tippoo in awe, and in clined him to reasonable terms But you gut the icins, and how will you manage the beast?" The Colonel replied, I cannot help it Hastings, with his profound knowledge of the native character reprobated the negotiation and cons dered that it should have been entrusted to Colonel Fullerton. and conducted at the head of his army, at the capital But Hastings was now comparatively powerless The Court of Ducctors, a prey to intrigue, had recently renewed their con demnation of his conduct, his own Council deserted him Lord Macartney set him at defiance, and the negotiations with Impoo were left to the mismanagement of Madras The com missioners were marched leisurely through the country, protect the natives from the oppression of Europeans, and to give the English community the blessing of their own laws. The judges were invested with the attributes of the twelve judges in Westminster, and empowered to administer Linglish law in all its branches. Parliament had thus, without any correct knowledge of the circumstances or wants of the new conquest, established two independent powers, but and ne glected to define the sphere of their authority, and a coll sion between the government of the Company and the judicial officers of the Crown, became mentable. One of the earliest acts of the Court was to hang Aundu Loomar for an offence which I ad not been capital since the days of Munoo The next blow fell on the zemindars. The country was slowly recovering from the confusion incident to the introduction of a novel and foreign administration, and the zemindars were but partially reconciled to the new economy. The Supremo Court, as soon as it was established, began to issue writs against them, at the suit of any one who could fee an atter ney, on the strength of which they were immediately seized in their own cutchenes, or rent courts, and dragged down to Calcutta from a distance, sometimes, of several hundred miles, and consigned to jul if they were unwilling, or unable, to furnish bul No indemnification was given to them for the expense or disgrace they had incurred even when their arrest was cancelled for illegality Of English law, then the most complicated system of jurisprudence in the world, they were profoundly ignorant, and they felt that no innocence and no ingenuity was able to protect them from the new dangers which menaced them A dark cloud hung over the country, as portentous as a Mahratta invasion These proceedings necessarily affected the col-The Court a

xtv]

31.7

lection of the revenue, and endangered the re-Interference with the sources of government . The disposition to withhold every payment, however just, is in herent in the native character and the slightest pretext is sufficient to develope it. The arrest and humination of the 412

zemindars destroyed their credit and authority, and gave their unscrupulous ryots an advantage they were not slow to improve It had, moreover, been the immemorial custom in India to subject defaulters to coercion, without which they rurely paid their rents, but the attorneys of the Supreme Court, who had spread themselves over the country, advised the ryots and renters when arrested, to sue out a writ of labeas corpus, when they were brought down to Calcutta and discharged, leaving the landlord without rent or remedy The cuminal judicature of the country, which embraced the police of thirty millions of people, had been left in the hands of the Nabob of Moorshedabad and his judicial and executive officers But the authority of their courts was at once anni-lulated by the judges of the Supreme Court, who declared that the person called Mobarik ood dowlah, that is, the Nabob of Moorshedabad, was a phantom, a mere man of straw, without any legal right to the exercise of any power whatsoever In one instance, indeed, the Court proceeded so far as to issue a process of contempt against his Highness
The next blow was aimed at the government itself, though it had been established under the authority of Parliament
The judges refused to acknowledge the East India Company except as a trading body, with no other powersor resistent then an ordinary commercial association. They interpreted that an ordinary commercial association along interpreted the Act to signify that the government of the country by the Governor General in Council was subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and that it would be penal for the Company, or any of its servants, to disobey any order or process emanating from it. There was no department of the state with which they did not see fit to interfere, the whole fabric of the administration was shaken to its hase, and the country was threatened with universal anarchy, simply to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Crown court, and to exalt the authority of its judges

The configuration and oppression to which the enforcement of these

claums gave rise would exceed the limits of this epitome, and one must suffice as a simple A baloo named Cossinath was anstigated to bring an action in the Supreme Court in August, 1779, against his master, the rap of Cossijurah, hing to the south of Calcutta. A writ was issued on the strength of his south of Chemita. A write was required to find but to the extent of three lees and a bull of rupees. He conceiled himself to avoid the process, upon which the Court minedately despatched two sheriffs officers, with a body of eighty as men, of whom thateen were European sailors, and the rest natives habited as sepoys, and all armed with muskets or swords. On their armed at Cossijurah, they forced their way into the palace of the raja, multrented his servants, violated the practity of the zenna, and descrated his family temple, pracking up the idol with other lumber in a basket, and affix mg the seal of the Court to it. Hastings considered that the time had at length arrived when he could no longer delay to vindicate the authority of the government, and afford pro-tection to the natives, whitever might be the haznd attend-ing it. He instructed the military officer at Midnapore to intercapt the whole party on their return, and march them to Calcutta, where they were immediately liberated To prevent similar outrages which were then mediately he likewise issued a proclamation, directing all landholders of every degree to consider themselves exempt from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, except in the two cases of their having bound themselves by agreement to submit to it, or being British subjects The Supreme Court then proceeded to usue a summons against the Governor General limited and the members of the Supreme Council, but they peremptorily refused to obey it.

Fettloss were now addressed to Parliament by the Audional Parliament by the Audional Parliament by the Audional Parliament by the Audional Parliament Parl

Adawlut, or chief court of appeal in Calcutta, in which the Governor General and the Council were appointed to preside, which, however, their political and administrative duties seldom allowed them to do In April, 1780, Hastings re modelled the whole system, separated the fiscal from the civil jurisdiction, leaving the former with the Provincial courts, and entrusting the latter to the civil courts which he estab lished in each district, with an appeal to the Sudder Dewanny He then offered the post of chief judge of this court to Sir Elijah Impey, upon a salary of 7 000 rupees a month, Sir Elijah Impey, upon a satary of 7000 rupees a month, which was accepted without any hesitation. This appoint ment, together with that of another of the Grown judges as Commissioner of the Dutch settlement of Clunsurat, which had been recently captured at once queried the Supreme Court, and released the Government from its embarrassments.

The position in which this arrangement placed arrange as, the Chief Justice, proved highly advantageous to 1200. the interests of the country. The judges of the new civil courts who were young and inexperenced, were placed under his supervision and guidance, and he was thus enabled to give form and consistency to the system of civil udicature Though bred in all the technicalities of English law, he drew up a code of regulations for the administration of instice in the interior, comprised in ninety five sections. or justice in the memory companies an inner resecutions, brief and clear, and exactly adapted to the simplicity of native librate, and it has formed the basis of all subsequent logisla lation at the Bengal Pres dency But this arrangement was assailed with great animosity, both on the Court of Directors and in the House of Commons Sir Flijah was recalled for and in the House of Commons Sirriju was recalled for lawing accepted the offec, and Hastings was eventually impeached in addition to the other or mes charged against him for having conferred it. But, after the lyses of ciglity years the wisdom of this proceeding has been trumphantive vindicated by the Parliamentary enactment of 1860, which placed the Chief justice of the Supreme Court at the lead of the Company & Court of Appenl, and by amalgamating the Arm Courts, committed to hum the duty of supervising the judical system of the Presidency On the receipt of the petitions from Calcutta before alluded to Parliament passed an Act in which the functions of the Supreme Court were more distinctly defined and it continued from that feriod to the hour of its extinction, to enjoy the confidence and admiration of the entire community, European and native, for the equity and importantly of its decisions.

The pecuniary difficulties of the government of Cheyt Sing's Bengal were at this time most critical There was war with Hider, who was triumphant in the de nquency Carnatic, war with the French with the Dutch and with the Mahrattas The entire expense of all these wars fell upon the treasury in Bengal a debt of a crore of rupces had been incurred, and the credit of Government was at the lowest clib Hastings was under the necessity of looking to other sources than the ordinary revenues of the country for supplies and he was induced to make an additional demand on Chert Sing, he was induced to make an additional aemand on they Sing, the rays of Bentree The grandfather of the rays had begun I fe with the reat of half a village, but amidst the distraction of it o timps, had succeeded in acquiring a territory which yielded 50 laces of rupees a year. The district was transferred by the Nabob Viz er to the British government in 1775, and the rajah received a sunnud from the Governor General, which stipulated that he annual tribute should be limited to twenty two lacs and a half a year Hastings s demand was therefore stigmatised by his opponents as a breach of faith But the tenure of Benares was more that of a fendatory than But the tenure of because was more that of a fentiority it an of a mere zemindar, which appears evident from the fact that Hastings when irrited by his opposition, threatened to reduce him to the cond ten of a simple zemindar like the raja of Burdwan. By the law and constitution of Ind's he was hable in cases of emergency, to be called on for extraordinary aids by his superior lord. Such payments had formerly been made to his hege, the Nabob of Oude, and he was equally bound to meet the requisition made upon him on the present emergency by Hastings, of 2,000 horse and five less of rupees. The raph pleaded poverty, and endeavoured to evide the payment of the full amount, but Hastings had received intimation from various quarters that his horids exceeded two crores of rupees, and he persuaded himself that the raph's refuerance, to comply with his demands, was a crime. He detenimed, therefore, the make him pay largely for his pardon, to exact a severo vengence for his delinquency, and to draw from his guilt the means of relief to the Company's distresses."

416 mastings's excessive diviand and his dancer [chao

Chert Care securive and meet the valued of the rays of Berar, and nego the a peace with the Regency at Poona. Chert

Sing was fully apprised of his resentment and historical to anort it by waiting on him as he entered the province, and flumbly beseeching him to accept twenty less of rupees The offer was rejected with scorn, and the sum of fifty lies peremptorily demanded. On his arrival at Benares on the 15th of August, 1781, Hastings sent the rap a statement of his complaints, and placed him under arrest, by sending four companies of seloys to take the place of his own guards. The city of Benaics, the citadel of Hindooism, and the great focus of political intrigue, had always been notorious for its turbulence On the present occasion, the populace roused by the indignity inflicted on the raja rose upon the sepoys who had brought no ammunition with them, and slaughtered both them and their officers During this emeute, the raya" himself escaped across the river to his fortified palace at Ramnugur The situation of Hastings was perilous in the extreme, the native force on which he depended for protec tion was annihilated, and he, and the thirty gentlemen with lum had only their own weapons to trust to Happily the infariated retuners of the raja crowded tumultuously after him, and quitted the city, instead of attacking Hastings in his defenceiess state. The whole province was speedif in a blaze of revolts, and the zemodars of Bebar, who had ere een distillated towards the English, were ripe for insurrection. It was at this critical period, while beleaquered in Beaures that Hastings exhitited his rare strength of nerve, by continuing and completing his negotiations with Sindia, as if he had been tranquily residing in Calcutta. Equalivermental le was the confidence that Sindia manifested in the destines of the English, by affixing his seal to the treaty, while he knew that the life of the Governor General was in copured. His situation at Baares, notwithstanding the rapid arrival of troops from different quarters, was not, however, considered defensible, and he made his escape during the right, by a window, and rowed down to Chunar.

The rate collected a force of 20 000 men but did Capture of Fig-gar 9th not cease to unportune Hastings for a reconcilia Nov. 1 31 tion, which was wisely rejected, lest it should be attributed to fear The faja's troops were successively de fested, and he took refuge in B dgegur, but not deeming himself safe there, fled to Bundlecund with as much treasure as his elephants and camels could carry The begums, who were left behufd, surrendered the fortress on the 9th of November . In a private letter to the commander of the troops, in reference to the treasure which was supposed to be deposited in Bidgegur, Hastings had incautiously remarked "With regard to the booty, that is rather your consideration than mine I should be sorry that any of your officers and soldiers lost any part of the reward to which they are so well On the strength of this communication, the o'licers proceeded at once to divide the booty, amounting to forty lacs of rupees, among themselves and the troops Hastmes was especially mortified at the loss of the treasure with which he had hoped to replemsh the empty treasury of the Company The officers were nivited to return it, and to leave their claims to the equitable decision of the Supreme Council but they manife ted their discretion by refusing to trust their interests to the arbitrement of a purper government In extenuation of the odious proceedings of Hastings towards Cheyt Sing, it was asserted that he was disaffected to the Butish Government, but, in this case, Hastings would not have ventured to enter the capital with so slender an escort Chayt Sing was culpable in having hesitated to afford stamediate aid to his hege sovereign in a great public exigency, but the imposition of a fine of fifty lacs of rupees for withholding payment of one-tenth of the sum, had an aspect of undictiveness which it is impossible to palliate; and although Hastings was so blinded by his own judgment as to claim ment for the transaction, it has always been considered a dark spot in his administration, and it will hereafter appear that it was on this point that the question of his unperchaent eventually turned Cheyt Sing enloyed an asylum at Gwalior for twenty nine years His nephew was rused to the throne, and the tribute augmented from twenty-two and a half to forty lics a year The disappointment which Hastings had experienced regarding these treasures increased his The treasury in Calcutta was drained for the support of more than sixty thousand troops required for the war at Bombay and Madras, and money was indispensable. It was in these circumstances that the Nabob vizier waited on him at Chunar, and represented the impossibility of making good from his exhausted country the arrears of a crore and a half of rupces due to the Company, and of continuing to maintum the English troops stationed in his dominions these troops were indispensably necessary to their defence, . and the withdrawal of them would have been immed ately followed by a Mahratta invasion He entreated Hastings to relieve him from the charge of at least one brigade, and to allow him to take pessession of the wealth and the jaygeers of the beguns, to enable him to discharge his of ligations to the Company Hastings subsequently affirmed that if the Vizier had not made this proposal, he himself would never succession, or the practice of Oriental courts. As to the harbanties practised on the beguns and their servants by the Nabob, Hastings cannot be held personally answerable for them . the odium which they have fixed on his administration, was the revence of civilization for an alliance with barbarism, for a most objectional le object

420

Fyzoolla Khan, the Robilla chieftain, was, in Fyroni a Khan. 1774, left in possession of Rampoora and several other jay geers, of the annual value of fifteen lacs of rupees He devoted his attention with great zeal to the encouragement of agriculture and the improvement of the country, and with such success as to double his rent roll in seven vears, without overtaxing his subjects. He was bound by treaty not to increase his military force beyond 5 000 men, of whom 3,000 were to be at the disposal of the Naboh vizier, when he happened to be engaged in war In November, 1780, Hustings, distracted by the intelligence of Colonel Bailies defeat, instructed the Vizier to demand the aid of 5 000 troops for the defence of Behar, to liberate the English regiments for service at Madras Tyzoolla Khan, with all humility, made an offer of 2,000 horse and 1,000 foot Hastings, who always expected prompt obedience to his requisitions, was exasperated at this hesitation, and under the alarm created by Cheyt Sing's proceedings, assented without adequate consideration, to the request made by the Vizier to dispossess Fyzoolla Khan of the whole of his zemindary and annex it to his own dominions but he soon after decovered and acknowledged the error he had com mitted in this interpretation of the treaty, revoled the per mission he had given to the Vizier and released Fyzoolla Khan from the obligation of furnishing any quota of troops in future, on the payment of fifteen lacs of rupees

These proceedings were severely condemned by the Court of D rectors who pronounced the de-Censure of the signa 1783—6 mand an Obeyt Sung, a breach of fault and ordered him to be restored to his estates. Under the in fluence of this vote of censure Hastings's colleagues in Council not only withdrew their support from him, but obecame united in their opposition to him, and he complained, with great reason that while he was still held responsible for the safety of India, his degradation had been proclaimed at every court in India "If,' he said, "I am to be threatened with disnission, my acts reprobated, the whole responsibility of the government thrown on me, with only in equal voice in Council, I cannot discharge my trust with ciedit or effect." In a letter to the Court of Directors of the 20th of March, 1783, after appealing to them to attest the patience and temper with which he had submitted to all the indignities heaped upon him during his long service, he announced his determination to quit their service, and re quested that a successor might be immediately nominated During the year 1784 he proceeded to Lucknow, and in compliance with the requisition of the Court of Directors. restored the payeers to the beguns, through the ageacy of the Nabob vizier He adjusted all accounts between Oude and the Company, made every arrangement for the payment of the English troops employed in its defence, and then with drew the Residency, which had become odious to the Vizier by its interference with his government, not less than by its depredations On his return to Calcutta, Hastings addressed valedictory letters to all the princes and chiefs of India, and having laid the keys of the treasury on the table of the Council Board, and delivered the Leys of the fort to his successor, Mr Macpherson, embarked for England in Febru ary, 1780, after a most eventful administration of thirteen years

Hastings reached England on the 13th of June to a keps and, and experienced the most grucous reception from 18th the King and Queen and even the Court of Direc tora greeted him with a courteous address. By one of the most miluential members of the House of Lords, ho was described as the Company a greet manuster—the powerful Chardam of the east. The Ministry, with one exception, evinced the most friendly disposition towards him, and the preeminent services he had rendered to his country in the Last fully justic fied his expectations of a peerage. But that exception was fatul to all his hopes. Mr. Pitt, the prime minister, had imbibed a vehement prejudice against him. He admitted that he was a great and wonderful man, and that the charges against him were ridiculous and absurd, but, he had committed four transgressions—he had attempted to extend the British dominions in India, which the minister highly disapproved of, he had forfested the confidence of the native praces, he had disoboyed the orders of the Court of Directors, and he had fixed enormous saluries to offices in India There was, moreover, an adverse resolution on the records of the House of Commons, and until it was done away with by a vote of thanks for his great services, Mr Pitt affirmed that he could not advise his Majesty to confer any honour on him, yet the manster's favourite colleague, Mr Dundas, with whom that damnatory vote originated, had subsequently declared, that Hasting's conduct was worthy of every praise he could bestow, and of every support his Majesty's ministers could afford him, and he went so far as expressly to pronounce him the saviour of India As to the vote of thanks, Mr Pitt had only to propose it to the House, and it would have been carned by acclamation Seven days after Hastings landed in Figland, Compresented of the most distinguished lenders of the bysal. Mr Burke, one of the most distinguished lenders meat such of the Whigs, give notice in the House of Commons that he would on a fature dry, make a motion regarding the conduct of a gentleman recently returned from India - But a meeting of the party was held soon after, and it was resolved, with great unanimity, to be unadvisable to embark in a crusade against him. There was therefore every reason to conclude that the meance of a prosecution would have blown over, but for the imprudence and arrogance of Major John Scott, the confidential agent and evil genius of Hastings Like other retired Indians of simple fortune he had purchased a borough and entered Pailament. On the first day of the ensuing session of 1786, he rose and defied Burke to make good his threat. After this challenge, Burke had no option but to pursue his intention and he entered upon the impeachment with all the ordour of his enthusiastic nature. His political associates, who had been his warm on the subject, felt themselyes bound in honour to rally round and support him, and this colebrated trial is thus truced up to the mistaken zeal of Hastings's own fraud, Major Scott, who emphatically "bullled" Bark into the prosceution. His first motion was for the production of papers, lat the House resolved, that he should state his case before he applied for decements to support it.

Hat nee 4th cleven charges, to which eleven others were sub sequently added. For many years he had made April, 1756. the politics and the people of India and their ancient history his particular study, and no man in the House has ever been more familiar with all questions relating to that country He was a worthipper of ancient institutions and dynastics, and having followed the career of Hastings step by step, gradually contracted a feeling of personal animosity towards him, for his attempts to subvert them in the East But all the matetrals of the charges were supplied by Mr Frances, Hestings's rancorous opponent in India, who had ol tained a seat in Far hament, and determined to hunt him down with all the rencour which might have been expected from the writer of Junius's leters After the charges had been introduced, Hastings obtained permission to be heard in reply, and on the lat of May appeared at the bar, bending beneath the weight of a docum at more prolix than even a Bengal distatch He read or till he was exhausted, when the clerks of the House can't to his aid and mumbled through its inter minable page, the reading of which required a second div The only impression produced on the House was one of we'rn

494

ness and impatience, yet so ignorant was Hastings of English sensibilities as to persuade himself that the vier of the reply was conceived in a happy hour, and by a blessed inspirations and that "it instantly turned all minds to his own way "

Of the twenty-two charges, only three were of The three prin any serious importance, and they referred to the eli al charina. first Robilla war, to Cheyt Sing, and to the begums

The rest-such as that of having in six revoluof Onde tions, brought the fertile and beautiful provinces of I urruckabad to a state of the most deplorable ruin, and of having impoverished and depopulated Oude, and rendered the country, which was once a garden, an uninhabited desert,-were the mere litter of Mr Francis's malignity The first charge accused him of having "hired British soldiers for the purpose of extirpating the innocent and helpless people inhabiting the Robillas" But the first Robilla war had received the approbation of the Court of Directors, it had taken place fourteen years before, and whatever might have been its criminality. Parliament had condoned it by subsequently reprounting Hastings Governor General Mr Dundas explained that when he proposed a vote of censure to the House on this transaction, he considered it sufficient for the recall of Haitings, but he had never supposed that it involved the necessity of a prosecution Both he and Mr Pitt voted against the charge, and it was consequently negatived by 119 to 67 |The charge of wanton crucity and extortion against the raja of Benares, was brought forward by Pox, in a speech of surpaising ability, but he rested his argument solely on the principle that Cheyt Sing was an independent prince, no way liable to be called on for succour by the Bengal Government Mr Ptt, who was expected to support Hastings in this case also, resisted this opinion, and asserted that Cheyt Sing was a assal of the Bengal empire, and owed allegiance to it, and was subject to extraordinary demands on extraordinary emergencies But, he added the whole of Hastings's conduct showed that he intended to a unish the aria with too much severity inflicting a fine of fifty lacs for a default of only five lacs. He voted, therefore, for the motion, which was carried by 119 to 79 *The adoption of this charge by the Ministry, was the turning point of the impeachment, which, after this decision, became mevital le The third important charge, which referred to the confi cation of the treasures and estates of the begums of Oude, was entrusted to Mr Sheridan and the speech of six hours' duration with which he introduced it, has been justly considered the greatest effort of oratory in ancient and modern times Mr Pitt, him elf, described it as possessing everything that genius or art could furnish to agitate and control the human mind. The House was enraptured by his eloquence, and gave an unusual sign of applause by clapping of lands, in which even the strangers were allowed to join without rebuke The debate was adjourned to the next day, on the extraordinary plea that, under spell of the orator, the members had lost their self possestion. When the House resumed, Mr Pitt came forward and asserted that Hastings s conduct regarding the treasures of the begins bore the strongest marks of criminality, though he did not impute to him the cruelties said to have been practised. After this decla rat on the charge was supported by a majority of three to one It was therefore resolved that Warren Hastings should be impeached before the Lords of high crimes and misdemeanours during the period of his Indian government and as the Lords refused the use of their own chamber, Westminster Hall was ordered to be fitted up for the occasion.

This of The tral which commenced on the 13th of it uses, 188 February, 1788, presented the most suggested which had been witnessed in England for more than a century—the impeachment by the Commons of Figland before the highest tradinal in the land of the man who had consolidated the power of Great Britain in the man who had consolidated the power of their brings in the Last. The scene was one of unexampled dignity and grander. The Queen and the Princesses, the Prince of Wales, and his royal brothers, with their trains, led the procession.

426

The peers in their ermine, were marshalled two and two according to their rank from their own chamber to the hall But the most interesting spectacle was the galaxy of genius. grouped together in the seats appropriated to the managers of the trial-Fox, and Burke, and Sheridan, and Grey, and Windham, men of imperishable renown in the annals of their country In the presence of this illustrious assembly, Warren Hastings, who had given law to the princes and people of India for thirteen years, appeared in the position of a culprit, and was required to go down upon his knees He was immediately commanded to rise, and accommodated with a seat, but of all the indignities which had been heaped on him in England or in India, this ignominious ceremonial was that which most acutely wounded his feelings The Lord Chancellor, who presided in the Court, and who had been his own school fellow at Westminster, concluded his address with much solemuty, "Conduct your defence in a manner that may befit your station and the magnitude of the charges against you, and estimate rightly the high character of those you have to answer-the Commons of Great Britain" To which Hastings replied with great dignity, "I am come to this light tribunal, equally impressed with a confidence in my own integrity, and in the justice of the Court before which I stand ' The pleadings were opened by Burke in a speech of such transcendent power, that Hastings hunself was carried away by the torrent of eloquence, and remarked that for half an hour he really considered himself the greatest miscreant in England The management of the impeachment, for any detail of which, however, it is not possible to fin! space in this brief sketch, was left by Mr Pitt in the hands of his opponents the Whigs, and it was conducted in a spirit of rancour, which in this age of moderation, is regarded with amazement The whole proceeding is inseparably connected with the traditions and the crudit of that party, and hence, after the large of three quarters of a century, its political chief still considers that the "whole of Hastings s policy was conceived in an Indian spirit of trick, perfidy, cruelty and falschood." To acquit Hastings of criminality would ne-· cessarily imply the severest reflection on the conduct of those who applied to him the epithets of "thief," "tyrant," "robber," "cheat," "swindler," "sharper," "captain general of migmty," and "spider of hell," and then expressed their regret that the English language did not afford terms more adequate to the enormity of his offences The trial dragged on for seven years, and terminated on the 23rd of April, 1790, in his complete and honourable acquittal. It cost him ten lacs of runees, and reduced him to poverty, but it has conferred immortality on his name

No man acting on so great a theatre, and in notes in tradea circumstances of such extreme difficulty has ever had his public conduct, and his private correspondence subjected to an ordeal lile that to which Hastings was exposed, and there are few who could have come out of it with such credit. In the opinion of the ablest, though most censorious of the historians of British India, "He was beyond all question the most eminent of the cluef rulers whom the Company has ever employed, nor is there any one of them who would not have succumbed under the difficulties he had to encounter" The impartial verdict of posterity has long to encounter him meaning versice of posterity has long since requitted him of the crimes charged on him. That he was not free from blame, the preceding narrative has abundantly shown, but his offences are cost into the slade when we contemplate the grandeur of his whole career, and we mry adopt the opinion of one of the most eminent statesmen of the day, "Though he was not blameless if there was a bald place on his head it ought to be covered with a bid price on its usual it ought to be covered with hundle." His presidency was a great spoch in the history of our Indian empire. On his arrival in Bengal as governor, I found the Company in possession of a large and fertile territory, but without any rule of government except that which had descanded to it from its commercial institutions, and no rule of policy but that which the acculent of the day supplied It was he who organised the administration and consolidated the political power of the British empire in the East While he was anxious to avoid territorical acquisitions, he set his heart on extending our political influence to every court, and making the Company the leading power in India, and the arbitrer of its destines This task he accomplished while opposed and thwarted by his colleagues, counteracted and reviled by his superiors, and enjoying but accidental and temporary authority." While the king of England and his ministers were losing an empire in the west, he was building upon an empire in the east To the natives of India his imperchaent was an incomprehensible enigma. They had followed him to his embarkation with their regrets, and when he had been deprived of all power, and had become the butt of persecution, the princes of India, whose confidence he was said to have forfested, hastened to offer him the spontaneous homage of their admiration Nor to this day is he regarded in India in any other light than as one of the most moderate and

CHAP.

The exclusive privileges granted to the East secret Com India Company were to expute upon three years' notice, after the 25th of March, 1786, and negotiations were therefore opened between the India house and the Treasury, towards the close of that year, which turned chiefly on two points, the right of the Crown to all territorics acquired by its subjects, and the share due to the public of the most honourable, as well as the ablest of British rulers advantages which the Company enjoyed. On the 9th of April, 1781, Lord North brought forward eight propositions in the House of Commons relative to the government of India, so unpulatable that the Court of Directors refused to apply for the renewal of the Charter on such terms But the Company was strong in the House and in the country, while the Ministry was tottering A compromise was, therefore, effected between the parties. The question of right to the territories acquired in India was left in abeliance, and the existing privileges were extended with scarcely any modification to a period of three years, after notice had been given on the 1st of March, 1791 The Company was likewise required to pay to the Treasury the sum of forty lacs of supces in hen of all arrears due to the nation, and three fourths of their surplus profits, after the payment of a dividend of eight per cent, were to go to the state In February of the year 1781, the neutions, formerly mentioned, from the inhabitants of Calcutta against the encroachments of the Supreme Court were presented to the House, and it was agreed to refer them to a Select Committee, of which Mr Burke was the life and soul, and which is remembered by the twelve able reports drawn up by his pen and submitted to Parlia ment It was these reports which for the first time diffused through the community in England a distinct view of the origin and progress of our rule in India, and of the im portance of the national interests which had grown up On the receipt of the intelligence of Hyder Alis mruption into the Carnatic, the Minister moved for the appointment of a Scoret Committee to inquire into the cause of the war, and the state of the Briti h possessions on that coast Six reports were presented by this Committee, through its chairman, Mr Dundag

Macon for the St. of the 9th of April 178°, Mr. Dundas moved the Macon for the St. whole House, and in a speech of three hours duration, denounced the conduct of the Presidencies in Ind., whom he charged with having plunged the nution into wars for the sake of conquest, volated the engagement of treates and plundered and oppressed the natives. He consured the Court of Directors for reprobating the conduct of their servants abroad only when it was not attended with profit. The House at once adopted the charges brought against St. Thomas Pambold, the late governor of Madras, and a bill of pains and penalties was introduced but in consequence of the unsettled state of parties, it dropped through leaving the black stain of his imquities still attached to 1 is character.

On the 50th of May, 1782, Mr Dundas moved for the recall of Mr Hastings from Bengal, and Mr Hornbyaftom Bombay, for liaving in sundry instances acted in a manner repugnant to the honour and polecy of the nation, and thereby brought great calamities on India, and enormous expenses on the Comp in The House voted Hastings a recall, the Court of Directors followed the example, but the Court of Proprietors, which at this time comprised men of high strading and great eminence in the country, resolved that the Court of Directors was not bound to pay any attention to the suggestions of only one branch of the legislature, and passed a vote of thank to Hastings. This act of independence, which was recented by both parties in the House, sealed the doom of that Court Mr. Dundas declared at to be dangerous in principle and insuling to the authority of Parliament, and when he came into power two years subsequently, assisted in giving a death blow to its power.

430

blow to its power Frest Fights. The pecumiary embartassments in which the Eng. 1833. The pecumiary embartassments in which the expenses of the war in the Carnatic, damaged their position in no small degree. On the 5th of March they presented a petition to the House stating that of the sum exacted of them for the benefit of the nation, they had grid thirty lacs, but were unable to find the remainder, though it was only ten lats, and moreover, that they could not carry on the government of Indri for another twelvemonth, without the loan of a crore of rupces. Two Acts were passed for their rehef, but this application, combined with the reports of the two Committees, and the damaging debits in the House, produced a deep impression on the public mind and there was a general demand for some measure or imministrate with the min ortance and exigency of the case. Mr few, then at the head of the Orchiton Ministry, was  $w_{\rm re}(d)$  by the national we come to legislate for India, and le consequently brought forward his cell brief links Bill. Polit Live and Hussings had recommended to the Print Ministers of the day, to Lord Chatham and Lord North, that the government of Ind a stould be conducted in the name and under the authority of the king. But Mr Foxs Bill went much further He proposed that all the powers of government should be transferred for a period of four years, from the Comyany to a Board consisting or seven Commissioners, to be nominated in the first matatice by Parliament, and afterwards by the Crown The trade of the Company, was to be managed by measurement of lidux stock. Another Bull was I kewise introduced preciors of Ir du Stock. Another bill was I statistic mitual end of the reform of abuses in India, but its provisions were without vigour or soundness. A hobby of Mr Francis was also adopted, and the zemindars were declared to be the hered tary proprietors of the lands of which they collected the rivenue. As regarded making war or allivices with the native powers, the supreme authority in India was to be placed under more severe restrictions, and rendered more subordinate than before to the Board of Commissioners. fourteen thousa id miles off, in England.

175

The motives of Mr Fox, in the introduction of

Defeated ters
in the Bull, were pure and benevolent. He really believed that it was his mission ' to rescue the greatest number of the human race that ever were so gric viously oppressed from the greatest tyrany that ever was exercised. But the bill was considered diagerous to the blettes of the ration. The patronage of India was estimated to be worth two crores of rupces a year, and as the prucuple of conpetitive appointments had not then been discovered, it was believed it it to the Cross or or to the it was believed if it the transfer of it to the Cross or to the muster would distroy the balance of the cust into it. It was therefore opposed by many from the not part of motives. The Court of Directors, threatened with citi. Choose filled the contry with their complaints and a set of that after such a willing of chartered rights, no situits in a Englaid wis secture. The cry was echoed in left of the large of the court of the cou jobs of the India house, had lifted into the serate, and who presented a firm phalanx of opposition to a bill which cut off their children and connections from the prospect of similar fortunes. Every engine was set in motion to defeat this measure, yet it passed the lower House by a triumphant majority of 208 to 102 But the king had been alarmed by the assurance, that it would tale the dindem from his head, and thee it on the brows of Mr Fox He, therefore, adopted the unconstitutional course of authorizing Earl Temple to 'inform the peers, that he should consider any one who voted for it as no friend of his. The House of Lords therefore threw out the bill, and at midnight the king sent a messenger to the ministers, whom he cordially hated, to announce their diamigal

Mr Pits India Mr William Pitt, then twenty four years of age, was placed at the head of the new nunistry, and, after struggling for several months with an adverse House of Commons, at length appealed to the country, and obtained a majority of 160 The East India Company, then the most powerful corporation in England, had assisted him with their influence at the elections, and their interests were not forgotten when he was in power Their chief revenue was derived from the monopoly of the ten trade | They were in arrears for duty to the extent of a croic of rupees, which they asked him to remit The duty of 50 per cent then levied on the importation of the article, gave encouragement to smugging, and thereby diminished the resources of tle Company Mr Pitt reduced it to 12½ per cent, and endeavoured to make up the loss of sixty lacs of rupees which it entailed. by an increase of the very objectionable tax on windows and light On the 13th of August he introduced his India Bill in a speech in which he denounced, in no equivocal terms, the misconduct of the governors in Inda He had before him the three plans for the improvement of the government, which had been drawn up during the previous three years by Lord North, Mr Dundas and Mr Fox, from each of which he borrowed some of the materials of his own bill. The proposed the appointment of a Board of Commissioners, consisting of superniting of a local of commissioners, consisting or six members of the Privy Council, with power to check, superniting and control, all the acts, operations and soncerns, connected with the civil and military government, and the revenues of India The Court of Directors were to submit to the Commissioners, not only the letters received from India, as before, but all those which were transmitted by them. All despatches and orders dictated by the Board were to be im plicitly obeyed. At the same time a committee of secrecy was 'constituted, consisting of three Directors, through whom all important communications from the Board were to be sent, an interior cabinet was thus established at the India House, which excluded twenty one of the Directors from all share of political power The Court of Proprietors, which had recently set the Hon e of Commons at defiance was restricted from interfering with any of the decisions of the Board, and was thus reduced to utter insignificance Two other provisions were inserted. the one to compel every officer returning from India to deliver a schedule of the property he had acquired, the other to estable ha separate and august tribunal in England, for the trial of great delinquents. But these anomalous enactments were speedly abrogated. It was also declared in this till that the pursuit of schemes of conquest was repugnant to the wish to the honour and the policy of the British nation, and it was therefore enacted, ' that it should not be lawful for the Governor General without the express authority and concord of the Court of Directors, or of the Secret Committee, either to declare or commence hostilities, or to enter into any treaty for making war against any of the native princes or states in India, or any treaty guaranteeing the dominions of such princes or states, except when he thities should have been commenced, or preparations actually made for the attack of the Entish nation in India, or of some of the states and princes whose dominions it shall be engaged by sub-sting technes to defend." How far this attempt to stop the growin

FCTIAR 494 CONCLETED OF THE TWO RILLS

of the British empire by Act of Parliament was successful, will be seen in the course of this history It is difficult to account satisfactorily for the the Bills, 1784 reprobation of Mr Pox's bill, and the commendation bestowed on that of Mr Pitt In both the monopoly of the trade to India and China was left to the Company, and the Directors were to be chosen by the Proprietors object of both was the same, to deprive the Court of Directors of all power in the government of India, and transfer it to the Ministry of the day, by whom, in both cases, the Commis sioners were to be appointed, for the Crown meant its respon sible Ministers But, then, Mr Pitt left to the Company the semblance of power while he imperceptibly took away the reality He left the Court of Directors all the trappings of greatness, their grand house, their magnificent banquets, and their vast patronage, they were still the grandest corporation in the grandest city of the world, but, there was the check-sthing behind the michinery, which controlled all its move ments From the passing of this bill in 1784, to the period when, in 1858, Mr Fox's plan was consummated, and the government of India distinctly transferred to the Crown, the administration of India was conducted under the absolute control of the President of the Board, though methe name of the Company The government of India was a despotism at home, and a despotism abroad The Indian Minister was, it is true, responsible to Parliament, but the responsibility became a farce, when the members rushed out of the house at the name of India Mr Dundas was appointed the first President of the Board and continued for sixteen years to manage the affairs of India with ability which has never been surpassed The office has since been considered one of inferior importance and dignity, and, with occasional exceptions, has been left to second, and even third rate men Indeed, there are few circumstances more striking in the history of our Indian empire, than the contrast presented by the brilliant genius of its successive Governors General, and the dull mediocrity of those who have presided over the government at home

436 DINDAS DISCHAPCES THEN WITHOUT INQUITY. [CHAP.

justice, and estal lishing a fund for their liquidation. Mr Pitt's India Bill contained the same enactment, and the Court of Directors entered upon the duty with great real, but before the close of 1781 Mr. Dundas took the affair out of their hands, and determined to pay off the demands without any investigation whatever. To determine the order of payment be divided them into three classes, and directed that the sum of twelve lass of page las should be annually appropriated to this of ject, giving the pricedence, however, to the private debts, over the debt due to the Company. The Court of Directors remenstrated against this preposterous arrangement, and justly pleaded their prior right to the repayment of the expenses they had incurred, almost to their own bankruptey, in defending the Carnatic from Hyder's invasion, and for which the Nibob had already made an assignment of seven lacs of pagodas a year. They reprobated the proposal to divert any portion of this sum to satisfy the demands of his fraudulent creditors But the powers of government had passed out of their hands. The President of the Board of Control refused to reconsider his decision, and the subject was brought before the House in February, 1785 It was on this occasion that Mr Burke delivered his celebrated speech on the Nabob's debts, and consigned the Benfields, and the Atkinsons, and the whole crew of Madras extertioners, to everlasting infamy He ascribed the singular course i ursued by Mr Dundas to the exercise of Parliamentary influence appeared that Paul Benfield had been enabled to make no fewer than eight members at the recent election, from funds surplied by the Nabob of Arcot, and their votes were placed at the disposal of the Ministry "This," exclumed Mr Burke, "was the golden cup of abominations, this the chalice of the fornications of rapine, usity, and oppression, which was held out by the gorgeous eastern harlot, which so many of the people-so many of the nobles had drained to the very dregs " But so powerful was the Ministry in the House, that they did not con lescend even to notice this brilliant speech. Mr. Dundas's

433 THE CARNATIC REVENUES [CHAP 4 two duk spots in our Indian administrations, and they appear

all the more scandalous when contrasted with the general integrity and justice of our proceedings

The revenues of the Carnatic—his decision which Mr Dundas took in the Carnatic—his decision was equally unfortunate The irruption of Hyder

All into the province had constrained Hastings to demand an assignment of all the revenues of the Carnatic to provide for its affence, with the reservation of one sixth for the expenses of the Nabob The Nabob was obliged to submit, but under the influence of his creditors, who refused to advance money without fresh tunnaus, he spared no exertion or artifice to defeat the arrangement, and at length sent an agent to Hastings to appeal against the measures of Lord Macartney Hastings imprudently listened to his tale of wrong, and issued an order for the restitution of the assignment. The districts had been placed under the able management of a board of honest men, and had yielded a larger revenue than they had ever produced before, to surrender them to the Nabob would have reduced the Presidency to destitution at a time when the army was seven months in arrears An angry discussion arose between Madras and Calcufta, but Lord Macarteny at length succeeded in returning the revenues, and his conduct received the approbation of the Court of Directors But Mr Dundas had not I cen many months at the head of the Board of Control before he ordered them to be peremptorily given back, on the ground that the war had ceased. and that 'it was necessary to give to all the towers of India a strong proof of the national faith' The Nabob Ind received a much larger amount of ready money from the punctual payment of his share of the revenues than he had ever received before from the districts and he could therefore have no interest in resuming the management of them it was of the highest importance to his creditors, of whom Ber field was the representative, and, at the same time, the Nabobs chief a leiser in all su h matters, to regain their hold mitted his reasons to the Court of Directors the chief of which was that these landholders were endeavouring to baffle the Commissioners, and that the Court declared themselves perfectly satisfied with the course he had adopted. When the matter came under Parlamentary investigating, it was attested by four witnesses that at the Madras Presidency trunsctions of this nature had always been conducted by the President himself, and subsequently communicated to the Board.

APPENDIX

442

Regarding the I ribe of a lac of rupees to his secretary, Mr Red head by Seetaram my it is shown that Mr Redhead nove enjoyed the considence of Sir I homas and was dismissed within a few months of his arrival at Madras and died soon after. A paper was discovered among his effects which purported to be a translation from the original in the Gentoo language containing a promise on the part of Sectaram my to pay him a lac of rupees on the performance of cer tain services. It was not attested by Sectaram or by Mr Redhead His seceutors however sued the native for the amount in the Mayor a Court and obtained a decree, which was reversed on appeal by the President in Council. An attempt was made to implicate Sir Thomas in the odium of this transaction, but the counsel for the bill found that it could not be sustained and abandoned the charge

It is stated in the histories of India that when Sir Thomas sum moned the zemindars of the northern gircars to Madras Viziram rai the zemindar of Vizagapatam, declined to obey the injunction. pleading the migry which his estates would suffer from his absence but that his brother Sectaram ray hastened thither and succeeded in obtaining from Sir I homas Rumbold the entire command of the zemindary in spite of his brother's remonstrances. The version of this affair given in these papers, and substantiated by documentary evidence presents it in a totally different aspect. Sectaram was the eldest son and the lawful heir of the principality, but under the pressure of palace intrigues was induced to relinquish his right to his brother and to consent to act as his dewan or steward in which capacity he managed the estates with such fidelity and benefit as in a few years to double the rent roll A competitor at length succeeded in poisoning the mind of Viziram raj against his brother, and supplanted him in his office Sectaram was at Madras seeking the intervention of the public authorities before the arrival of Sir Thomas who determined if possible to reconcile the lirothers. The new deway who was a defaulter to the extent of £90 000 was directed to proceed to the zemindary, and bring up his accounts Sir Thomas embraced the opportutity of his absence which relieved Viziram from the spell of his influence to make up the fam lyquarrel Sectaram was re appointed dewan and cont nued to live in harmony with his brother and secured the punctual payment of the public revenue, and promoted the improvement of the family property

The most important series of events elucidated by these documents is that, buch refers to the transfer of the Guntoor sircar which has i cun assumed, without question, as the cause of the conf deracy formed to

444 API ENDIX.

of the Madros Council, and submitted to Mr Histings, who mided divers alterations, and their returned it to be curried into effect, with his full concurrence. A detachment of British troops must hen sent to occupy the province, who were obliged to cross a corner of a district which lived had recently added to his domitions. The Court of Directors likewise commended the meritorious conduct of Sir

Thomas in concluding the treaty
The Nixim and Hyder resented this proceeding, but their indignation only served to demonstrate the wisdom and policy of it. The Nixim reproched his brother for having reuted the sicrar to the English, when he should had made it over to Hyder Ali. Hyder had resolved to ous Hasalut Jung and take possession of the province, which would give him a position on the flank of the Carnatic, and a port on the Coronamedic coast. He was irritated by the promptness with which this design was frustrated, and vowed that he would not allow the sirear to pass into the hands of "his old and bitter enemies" Dy a singular error, accidental or otherwise, the word "enemy was ply to Mahomed Ah, the nabob of the Carnation and not to the com pany whom Hyder always regarded with a feeling of rancorous hatted

With regard to the tribute of seven lacs of rupees a year the papers state that it had fallen into arrears before the arrival of Sir Thomas Rumbold The Nizam was pressing for payment, and the Madras Government had earnestly entreated the Governor General to assist them with funds to discharge it The Madris Presidency was reduced to such a state of poverty, that when the troops had been paid for one month they knew not where to look for the next supply Mr Holland was sent to Hyderabad, not to make a positive demend of remission to be eventually supported by violence, but to solicit a reduction of the sum, on the plea of poverty, and if the Nizam appeared to be propitious, to propose the entire relinquishment of it, coupled with certain propositions which it was thought would appear an equivalent for the sacrifice If they were rejected, he was instructed to assure the Nizam that the current tribute, as well as the arrears, would be paid "as soon as they were in cash." Mr Holland found on his ar rival, that the Nizam had taken the French force dismissed by Basalut Jung into his own service, which, considering that the Linglish were then at war with the French, was a gross breach of the treaty, and the Governor of Madras strenuously remonstrated with the Nizam for openly protecting and encouraging the enemies of the Company Mr Holland thereforeinformed him that the pryment of the tribute would be made on his giving full satisfaction regarding the brench

The hostile confederacy formed by the Amam is attributed by the historians to the irritation produced in the mind of the finam by the Gu toot transactions and the tribute negotiations. But the documents show that it was formed before they had occurred, and that this fact was admitted by the Governor-General himself. The APPENDIX unjustifiable, manner. The law officers of the Crown condemned these proceedings as unjust. Some of the more important allega-tions in the bill were abandoned and others Ir ke down when, brought to the test of evidence, and the bill stelf was withdrawn twenty months after it had been presented, by a motion that it be read that day six months.

44G

It is to be hoped that this valuable collection of documents will at no distant period be given to the public fir the infirmation of those who take an interest in the history of British India, and the guidance of those who may hereafter treat of this subject.